NFL team logos are everywhere, so it should be easy to identify for any NFL fan. What if the colors of these logos change? Does it add a key to their ability to identify the team they're attached to? Here's a test you can learn from. Over the years, teams have changed and adapted their logos once. Sometimes, these changes are small, and even only big fans will know the difference when a new logo is produced. Other times, teams The Baltimore Ravens route the 1999 season or, as the Pittsburgh Steelers did in 1969, by completely renewing their logo. Are you ready to start identifying these NFL logos after they are re-colored? You'll have to identify all 32 teams from both leagues, and it can be a little difficult as teams that have won a lot lately haven't gotten the same ad. If you are ready to see these colors in a completely new light, jump into this test and find out if you are watching enough football to get a perfect score. Sporcle.com Mobile Site → Image: Shutterstock was known as THE NFL APFA (American Professional Football Association) during his infancy. The league started in 1920 with 11 teams, only four of which lasted until the end of the season. By 1922, the NFL officially began, and today there are still only a handful of those teams: the Arizona Cardinals, who started as the Chicago Cardinals, the Chicago Staleys now known as the Chicago Bears, and the Green Bay Packers. Since then, dozens of teams have started as a new franchise, with cities moved and dissolved. Almost curly logos such as the arrivals and departures of NFL teams are their constant modernization. Some logos are time test stand, while others are flashy and bold. If you consider yourself an elite NFL fan, then it's time to speed up and see how many of these NFL teams can detect from just a small section of a logo. You may think it's easy enough, but remember - logos, along with their designs and colors, change often. It's time to pack and line up. We hope you don't stumble at five yards.
