The Australian Deer Association Inc (ADA) is an Australian non-profit association that is part of South Australia with branches in all states and territories. The Australian Deer Association was founded on September 5, 1969 (first called the Australian Deer Hunters Association) to advocate for deer feathery and deer hunting. [1] The ADA promotes scientific research on deer, habitat conservation, and lobbies on legislation on deer and recreational hunting. [2] The goals of the Australian Deer Association are listed in their constitution as: [3] The improvement of the status of deer in Australia, Promotion of research into the habits of deer; and the scientific study of deer in Australia and their relationship to the Australian environment, promotion, application and publication of the methods of management and control of deer on semi-domesticated or wild, maintenance and improvement of habitat for deer and other wildlife; in particular, by encouraging governments to adopt legislation and make regulations based on sound management principles, conservation, and where appropriate the generation of deer hunting as a legitimate sport, conservation and extension of public access to the Australian bushland for recreation, and encouragement of such use, Preservation of the environment, Training of hunters in the safe handling of firearms, and, the personal adoption of members of the association's membership code to the Australian Deer Association considered by most states in Australia as a real reason for a weapons license. The association is involved in hunter training, [2] including firearm safety [4] and R-class licenses for the New South Wales Game Council. [5] Since 1972, the ADA has operated the Australian Antlered Trophy Register, with the Douglas Scoring System to measure and score deer trophies' antlers. To score points, it had until then been a local strategy, and the implementation of the system made it possible to use a national strategy. The score was first published by the association in 1976. Ada publishes a magazine with 6 editions per year. References ^ Australian Deer Association | A national hunting and deer management organisation. austdeer.com.au.
