Total Products 1-9/16 Show 9 15 30 45 Full page: Page 2 Products 10-16/16 total Show 9 15 30 45 Full page: Optimus only uses thrown acrylic tubes from premium name brand suppliers® such as Plexiglas® by Arkema and Polycast™ by Spartech. Cast acrylic tube is one of the most difficult types of acrylic, but the quality is the second highest. The benefits of casting are not small: highly fracture-resistant, highly stain resistant and excellent optical clarity. In fact, our cast acrylic is much stronger than saffical and almost impossible to break. Feel free to have the hexaxaly key furniture in place, our block does not blink. CAST VS EXTRUDED ACRYLIC TUBE Unlike cast, an extruded acrylic tube can be very cheap to buy and easy to manufacture. Therefore, almost every water-rationing company uses extruded. But extruded acrylic is not suitable for liquid cooling parts. Extruded is prone to stress and spider net fractures from meming and expanding/contracting during temporary fluctuations. CAST VSINJECTION MOLDED NYLON TUBE As extruded acrylic, injection-formed nylon has similar drawbacks, including +/- 10% expansion variability and high fluid retention, all sources of stress. Injection molding requires self-threading screws instead of CNCed threads, which means that nylon accuracy and service life are very low. CASTVS BOROSILICATE GLASS TUBE Borosilicate glass, while looking great, has its own challenges. The glass cannot be machined, which requires additional support to create a seal, opening up a new set of potential leakage problems. Although borosilicate glass is much cheaper than cast acrylic, cast provides incredible durability and reliability while matching the clarity of the glass. Article No: 1011327 We use cookies.
