Donovan) When people learn to drive, they usually start with the most basic class of driver's license: a Class C license. However, to operate specialized vehicles such as ambulances or trailers of transport tractors, you must apply for special licenses. Most states have at least one motorcycle class, three non-commercial classes and three commercial licenses. The Websites of the Department of Motor Vehicles will help you understand the intricacies of licensing classes. In most states, licenses fall under classes A, B, C and M. Classes A, B and C are additionally broken down by commercial and non-commercial vehicles. These three classes cover cars, trucks and tractor trailers. In addition, Classes A, B and C have separate weight limits for both the main operating vehicle and any towed items. The Class C basic license allows you to drive two and three axis vehicles up to a certain weight (in California, 26,000 pounds and 6,000 pounds, respectively). A Class C license is a standard driver's license. With Class C, you can carry up to 16 passengers. Commercial Class C License contain approvals that allow the driver to carry hazardous materials or more than 16 passengers. Commercial Class B license allows you to drive up to a certain amount (e.g. 26,000 pounds in California) and towing commercial trailers up to a certain amount (usually 10,000 pounds). Commercial Class B drivers can also drive non-commercial Class B vehicles and tow vehicles that Class C drivers can tow. With a Class A commercial license, you can operate all Class B and C Vehicles and tow all commercial vehicles, regardless of weight. On the non-commercial side, the Class A license allows the operation and towing of all vehicles and trailers, with the exception of commercial vehicles, motorcycles and other vehicles requiring additional approval. Motorcycle driving requires a Class M license. In California, for example, an M1 license is required for standard motorcycles and an M2 license is required for motorized bicycles. The basic classes of licenses remain basically the same from state to state. Small differences may occur in weight restrictions for operation and towing. Some states may have special licenses for new drivers (such as a Class D license in Georgia) and some specialized vehicles, such as a fire truck (such as a Class A fire license in California). Not all states have two separate motorcycle license classes. No matter what class of license you apply for, you will have to pass a written test and a road test. States also often require young drivers to obtain initial training permits. Many DMVs offer a sample of written tests to help you prepare. All licensing classes also require application forms, age and name proof, vision tests and various fees for non-commercial licenses, permission is usually granted if you pass written tests. After a certain period of practice, you should return to the DMV and pass a road test. In order to obtain a non-commercial Class A or Class B license, you must already have a Class C license in good condition and adhere to additional requirements. For commercial licenses, most states require background checks and road exams with commercial driving testing centers. To pass the commercial driving test, you will need to pass a vehicle inspection and basic driving skills/tests, depending on the particular class. Motorcycle licenses also start with the permitting process. After a period of practice, you must pass both a written test and a motorcycle skills test. Age restrictions on certain types of licenses vary by state. With a Class C license, you can't tow more than one Commercial Class C licenses are required to transport hazardous materials (see section 6 for more details). Many states have different age restrictions. The most common age restriction is the curfew imposed on a new driver under a certain age. In West Virginia, drivers under the age of 21 have travel restrictions within the state. Other restrictions include L (which restricts drivers for vehicles without an air brake) and N (C C class restriction) and N (C C restriction) only allows the driver to drive buses of 26,000 pounds or less). Approvals are required to transport certain substances, regardless of the license class. The basic class C license has P (passenger approval) approved by a standard road test. Hazmat Transport is recognized as H (HAZMAT) approval. N approvals allow you to drive tanks, T approvals allow you to run doubles/triple, and F approval allows you to drive motorcycles (as opposed to a motorcycle-only M license). Each state allows residents to renew their driver's license a few months ahead of their expiration date. This process is similar to resuming in normal times, although there are some differences for specific groups of people. The requirements and timing of the extension vary by state, so contact your state's department of vehicles for specific information. The extension period varies depending on the state. It can range from three months to a year before the expiration date and up to two years after the expiration date. There are usually no restrictions on renewal early if you are not under the age of 21. In some states it is best to wait and extend on or after your birthday if you will be turning 21 during the extension period. For example, Massachusetts issues vertical licenses for people under the age of 21. These licenses indicate that the driver is not under 21 years old. If you extend until your 21st birthday, you will get a vertical license instead of the usual version. The OptionsMany State update offers several methods of renewing the license. These include resuming online, by phone, by mail or in person. Others require you to complete the process in person, whether early, sooner or late. Some states, including Texas, also require a personal extension if you resumed differently last time. This is necessary to update the vision test, signature, fingerprint and image. In most states, noncitizens must resume in person at a branch of the Department of Automotive Services to show proof of legal residency. Requirements for RenewIf you decide to renew online or over the phone, you must verify your identity with information such as your full name, driver's license number, date of birth and Social Security number. You may also need an online printer to print a temporary license to use before a new license arrives, if that's a requirement in your state. In some states, you are only eligible for these upgrade options if you don't need a vision test. In other states, such as Maryland, you can resume this path even if you need vision screening, but you must submit an electronic report from an approved vision certification provider. When you extend by mail, completed license application form, eye doctor's vision screening report and check or cash order for fee. If you are renewing in person, take a license, your renewal notice if you have received one, and your glasses or contacts for the vision test if applicable. Non-citizens must bring documents proving their legal presence, such as a work permit or a federal travel document I-94. From renewalsYou, you can apply for an early extension by mail if you are at the expense of the state or country and will not return before the license expires. Write a letter to your state's Department of Automotive Services to explain your situation and request an extension. Include a completed license application, a vision check report, a check or cash order for a fee, your address both in the state and beyond, and an envelope with a stamp for your license. License.
