First of all, the one who is in the Vados region, especially in the karsified rocks, limestones are often, and there are always sloping circulations. Second, one that occurs in aquifers such as intermediate water that fills the pores along a parmetic rock, of which it can also go back through the pressure and capillary phenomenon involved. Fusion: This state changes occurs when ice goes into a liquid state when the thaw occurs. Solidification: By lowering the temperature inside a cloud below 0oC, water vapor or water only freezes, rushing in the form of ice or hail, being the main difference between the two concepts is that in case of ice the cloud is a solidify of water that is usually presented at low altitudes. As moisture and small droplets of water in the cloud freeze, in the form of snowflakes, polymorphic ice crystals (i.e., which take several forms that appear under the microscope), while in the case of hail, it is the rapid ascent of water droplets that form a cloud that gives rise to the formation of ice, which take the form of hail and increase in shape with that ascent. And when there is a sleeve of water on the surface of the sea (there is a kind of tornado on the surface of the sea when it is very hot by the sun) this ice emerges in the ascent of water by adhesion of steam and water into the frozen core of large water droplets. The process is repeated from the beginning, continuously so it never ends or the water is exhausted. Water cans and exchanges Main article: Hydrophere water is unevenly distributed between different compartments, and the processes by which they exchange water are at odd rates. The largest volume corresponds to the ocean, followed by glacial ice and then groundwater. Surface freshwater represents only a small fraction and even small atmospheric water (steam and clouds).
