Gas tax by state 2016

If you want to avoid paying a lot of taxes, you might want to avoid the northeast and venture south instead. According to Kiplinger, these are the most and least tax-a respectful states. Many of the states that make up the Northeast were among the least tax-paying, including Maryland, New York, New Jersey, Connecticut, Vermont, and Maine. (Chart: David Foster/Yahoo Finance) First place, however, went to Minnesota. With a state income tax of 5.35% to 9.85%, depending on the taxable income bracket, Minnesotans are the hardest hit. The average local sales tax stands at 7.43% (depending on the local municipality) while taxes and gas taxes are at $0.29 per gallon. Maryland is not too far behind with state income tax between 2% and 5.75%. Its sales tax is 6% and its gas taxes and fees are $0.35/gallon. In addition, according to the Maryland Comptroller, the state's 23 counties and Baltimore City also collect a local income tax, which is collected on the resident state tax return for convenience to local governments. States with the highest sales tax include New York, California, and Illinois, each above 8% when it combines local and state taxes. If you live in New Jersey, you won't have to pay sales tax when you go shopping for food. REUTERS/Brendan McDermidNew Jersey has the highest property taxes and some of the highest gasoline taxes in the United States Its 6.6% sales tax makes it one of the least friendly states, although food, clothing, and prescription/non-prescription drugs are exempt. However, one of its southernmost counties, Salem County, collects only a 3.3% tax instead of the 6.6% tax, which is a policy designed to help local retailers compete with neighboring Delaware, which waives a sales tax, according to the Tax Foundation.On the other side of the spectrum there have been states like Alaska, Wyoming, South Dakota, Florida and Nevada, none of which even have state income tax. Alaska's sales tax is a measly 1.43%, and it's only for some jurisdictions. Wyoming's rate stands at 4%, with an average local tax rate of 1.46%. Nevada, which relies heavily on the gambling industry, has some of the lowest property taxes. Adriana is an editor at Yahoo Finance. Apple has come back, while JD has passed a new point of purchase. There is a strong feeling of growth among investors - of relief - that the new year will be characterised by lower volatility than in 2020. This would be enough to stimulate alcohol, but better yet, there is also a perception that markets will drive higher in the new year. Marko Kolanovic, a well-known quant expert at JPMorgan, sees the early stages of a positive feedback loop, with less volatility and systematic investment strategies coming together to drive earnings, attracting more investors - and, according to Kolanovic, pushing the S&P 500 to 4,600 by the end of the year. There will be a 25% increase for the index. A general market environment like this is bound to produce many stock winners, and Wall Street analysts are busy reporting them. Among other things, they are touching penny stocks, shares priced below $5 per share. Their starting price from the bottom of the rock makes pennies the logical place to look for huge returns on investments. Although their risk factor is high, even a small gain in absolute numbers will turn into a huge percentage gain in the share price. Using TipRanks' database, we've identified two penny stocks that professionals believe can see explosive gains in the coming months. Not to mention everyone gets a Strong Buy consensus rating from the analyst community.9 Meters Biopharma (NMTR)Some biopharmaceutical companies have a broad approach, while others focus on a niche. 9 Meters is one of the latter, targeting unmet needs for gastrointestinal patients. The company's development pipeline presents candidates for the drugs under investigation as treatments for short bowel syndrome (SBS) and celiac disease (CeD), two conditions that are both dangerous and difficult to treat. Perforating to the pipe details, the flagship 9-meter product, Larazotide, is in phase 3 for ced treatment. CeD affects about 1% of the population, but there are no approved therapies. The top-line data of the study is expected in the second half of 2021.In addition, last December, the company announced that it had an agreement with EBRIS, the European Institute for Biomedical Research in Salerno, to investigate Larazotide as a potential treatment for respiratory complications due to COVID-19. The other important drug in the company's pipeline is NM-002, for SBS. The company recently announced positive phase 1b/2a results, with a measurable impact on disease by a compound that was well tolerated by patients. NMTR's strong pipeline and $0.89 share price got substantial praise from Wall Street professionals.One of these NMTR bulls is Truist's Sriripa Devarakonda. Citing Larazotide as a key component of his bullish thesis, the analyst noted: We recognize that investors are likely to see a fundamental study in a hard-to-decipher celiac disease program as high-risk despite encouraging Ph2b data. We model $705M/$353M at the peak of unrectified/adjusted sales and see a potential 400% rise - 1650% from Ph3's positive reading. Devarakonda also sees significant unmet need in SBS and continues to believe that NM-002 has a differentiated profile compared to SOC. Its main takeaways from recent phase 1b/2a results include: 1) we believe the drug has shown early activity in patients with SBS; all 9 patients showed a significant reduction in the total volume of stool production; the average reduction in TSO was 42% compared to baseline; 2) responses occur quickly, with TSO effects observed within 48 hours of dosing; 3) the safety profile seems favorable, we would like to see a longer duration. To that end, Devarakonda estimates that NMTR shares a Buy along with a $5 price target. This figure conveys its confidence in NMTR's ability to rise by 462% in the coming year. (To watch Devarakonda's track record, click here) Moving on now to the rest of the Road, other analysts are on the same page. With 4 purchases and no holds or sales, the word on the road is that NMTR is a strong buy. Given its average price target of $4.33, the 386% rise may be in store for investors. (See analyzing NMTR inventory on TipRanks) Orchard Therapeutics (ORTX)Orchard Therapeutics takes a broad approach to the biopharmaceutical industry. The company is engaged in the development of gene therapies for rare, often terminal diseases, including neurometabolic disorders, primary immune deficiencies, and blood disorders. The gene therapy approach uses blood stem cells to provide correct genetic information directly into the patient's body. Orchard's pipeline demonstrates the diversity of disorders susceptible to gene therapy: the company has no fewer than 12 candidates for the drug under development. Among these candidates stands out Libmeldy (OTL-200). Libmeldy is being marketed as a treatment for MLD (metachromatic leukodystrophy), a rare mutation-based genetic disease of the nervous system. Libmeldy, which is designed to treat children with infants for juvenile forms of MLD by replacing the faulty ARSA gene, received her for medical use in the EU in December 2020.Wedbush analyst David Nierengarten notes Libmeldy's European approval and its implication for Orchard's progress. He writes: We look forward to the company's commercial execution in the EU and a possible 2022 approval in the US. Last month ORTX received IND IND authorization the FDA for the program that paves the way for discussions with U.S. regulators to decide on a suitable path to a BLA deposit. Net-net, with perhaps two gene therapies approved in the next 12 to 18 months and a fundamental one-third (MPS-I) study, we think ORTX shares are undervalued at these levels, the analyst concluded. In line with his bullish comments, Nierengarten rates ORTX as Outperform (i.e. Buy) and its $15 price target indicates 241% growth potential in the coming year. (To watch Nierengarten's track record, click here) Do other analysts agree with Nierengarten? They do. Only 3 rating buys have been issued in the last three months. Therefore, ORTX gets a Strong Buy consensus rating. At $15, the average price target indicates that stocks could appreciate 241% in the coming year. Alibaba Group Holding Ltd - ADR (NYSE: BABA) shares closed up 5.5% on Tuesday and at least one major options trader is betting that Alibaba will return above $300 by this time next year. Alibaba Trades: On Tuesday morning, Benzinga Pro subscribers received dozens of option alerts related to unusually large Alibaba option exchanges. Here are the big three: * At 10:00 a.m., a trader bought 1,005 Alibaba call options with a strike price of $300 due in January 2022 near ask price at $20.485. The trade represented a bullish bet of about $2.05 million. * At 10:10 am on .m., a trader sold 300 Alibaba put options with a strike price of $235 due in January 2023 at ask price of $54.30. The trade represented a bullish bet of about $1.62 million. * At 10:56 am on .m., a trader bought 1,000 Alibaba which put options with a strike price of $215 due June 18 at ask price of $16.60. The trade represented a bearish bet of about $1.66 million. Why it's important: Even traders who stick exclusively to stocks often closely monitor the market activity of unusually large trading options. Given the relative complexity of the options market, traders in large options are typically considered more sophisticated than the average stock trader. Many of these large options traders are wealthy individuals or institutions that may have information or these uniques related to the underlying stock. Unfortunately, stock traders often use the options market to protect themselves from their larger equity positions, and there is no foolproof way to determine whether an options trading is a standalone position or hedge. In this case, given the relatively large size of Tuesday's largest Alibaba option operations, they could definitely be institutional hedges. Related Link: How to Read and Trade an Option Alert Alibaba's Crackdown in China: Strange as it may seem, much of Tuesday's rally could have to do with a CNBC report that Alibaba founder Jack Ma is alive and well. generally mixed, with many traders taking the other side of the trade. Buying $2 million calls has a break-even price of $320.49, suggesting a 33.5% rise for the stock in the coming year. Buying low and selling at the top can be a bit untooled, but it's true, and the truth has the power to stay. But markets are on the rise. The NASDAQ rose 43 percent in 2020 and the S&P 500 posted a 16 percent gain. With a market environment like this, finding stocks that are captured in doldrums is harder than it seems. This is where Wall Street professionals can help out. We used TipRanks' database to identify three stocks that fit a profile: a share price that has fallen more than 30% in the past 12 months, but with at least double-digit upside potential, according to analysts. Not to mention everyone has earned a moderate or strong consensus rating. Esperion (ESPR)We will start with Esperion, a company specializing in therapies for the treatment of high levels of low-density lipoprotein cholesterol - an important factor that contributes to heart disease. The company's main product, bempedoic acid, is now available in tablet form under the Nexletol and Nexlizet.In February 2020 brands, both Nexletol and Nexlizet have been approved as oral treatments to lower LDL-C. Bempedoic acid remains in clinical trials of its effectiveness in reducing the risk for cardiovascular diseases. The study, called CLEAR Outcomes, is a large-scale long-term study, monitoring more than 14,000 patients with first-line data expected in the second half of 2022. The study covers 1,400 locations in 32 countries worldwide. Esperion shares peaked at February, after FDA approvals, but since then, the stock has declined. Shares are down 65% from their peak. Along with the decline in the value of the shares, the company showed a drop in revenues from the second quarter to the third quarter, with the top line falling from $212 million to $3.8 million. From the Q3 report, Esperion announced an offer of $250 million of senior subordinated bonds, at 4%, due in 2025. The offer offers the company an increase in available capital for further work on its development pipeline and marketing efforts for bempedoic acid. Chad Messer, who covers ESPR for Needham, sees the offer of notes as a net positive for Esperion. We believe that this cash position will be enough to support Esperion until 2021 and profitability in 2022... We believe that this funding should help to put an end to concerns about Esperion's budget. Despite a challenging launch for NEXLETOL and NEXLIZET, product growth continued in 3Q against the backdrop of a contracting LDL-C market. This growth trajectory suggests the potential for rapid acceleration as conditions improve, Messer wrote. To that end, Messer estimates that ESPR shares a Strong Buy and its price target, at $158, suggests that the stock has room for huge growth this year – up to 481% from current levels. (To watch Messer's track record, click here) Overall, Esperion has 6 recent reviews never recorded, with a breakdown of 5 Buys and 1 Hold to give the stock a Strong Buy rating from analyst consensus. The shares, trading at $27.16, have an average price target of $63.33, implying a one-year rise of 133%. (See analyzing ESPR inventory on TipRanks) Intercept Pharma (ICPT)Liver disease is a serious health threat, and Intercept Pharma focuses on developing treatments for some of the most dangerous chronic liver conditions, including nonalcoholic steatohepatitis (NASH) and primary biliary choangitis (PBC). Intercept has a research pipeline based on FXR, a biliar acid pathway regulator in the liver system. The action of FXR affects not only the metabolism of biliary acid, but also the metabolism of glucose and lipids and inflammation and fibrosis around the liver. The lead compound, obeticholic acid (OCA), is a CDCA analogue of biliary acid, and as such can play a role in FXR pathways and receptors involved in chronic liver disease. Treatment of liver disease through FXR biology has direct applications for PBC and is showing promise in the treatment of NASH complications. ICPT shares fell sharply last summer, when the FDA rejected the company's request to approve OCA for the treatment of NASH-related liver fibrosis. This delays the potential entry of the drug into a profitable market; there is no current treatment for nash, and the first drug to get approval will have the advantage of reaching an estimated market of between $2 billion and $5 billion in potential Annual. The effect on the stock is still felt and the ICPT remains at its lowest for 52 weeks. In response, in December 2020, Intercept announced major changes in high-level management, as CEO and chairman Mark Pruzanski announced that he will step down from January 1 this year. He is succeeded by Jerome Durso, former COO of the company, who will also take a place on the Board of Pruzanski will remain as a consultant and maintain the position of director on the company's board of directors. Piper Sandler analyst Yasmeen Rahimi delves into Intercept's ongoing efforts to expand OCA applications and reintroduce its new pharmacological application to the FDA. He sees the leadership transition as part of these efforts and writes, [We believe] Dr. Pruzanski's dedication to transforming the liver space is still strong and that he will continue to drive the ICPT's progress as a consultant and board member. In addition, we have had the pleasure of working closely with Jerry Durso and believe it will transform the company and drive ICPT's success in growing the PBC market and the path to the potential approval and commercial launch of OCA into NASH. Rahimi takes a long-term bullish stance on ICPT, giving the stock an overweight rating (i.e. buy) and a price target of $82. This figure indicates an impressive 220% increase over the next 12 months. (To watch Rahimi's track record, click here) Wall Street is a little more divided on the drug maker. ICPT's moderate buy consensus score is based on 17 reviews, including 8 purchases and 9 exemptions. The shares are priced at $25.82 and the average price target of $59.19 suggests an upward potential of 132% for the next 12 months. (See analyzing ICPT inventory on TipRanks) Gilead Sciences (GILD)Gilead had a year as a firework - fast up and fast down. Earnings came in 1H20, when it appeared that the company's antiviral drug remdesivir would become a primary treatment for COVID-19. In November, however, even though remdesivir had been approved, the World Health Organization (WHO) recommended against its use, and COVID vaccines now on the market have made remdesivir irrelevant to the pandemic. This was just one of Gilead's recent headwinds. The company has worked, in collaboration with Galapagos (GLPG), on the development of filgotinib as a treatment for rheumatoid arthritis. While the drug received EU and Japan approval in September 2020, the FDA denied approval and Gilead announced in December that it was suspending U.S. development efforts on the drug. Even so, Gilead maintains a diverse and active research pipeline, with over 70 research candidates at various stages of the development and approval process for a wide range of diseases and conditions, including HIV/AIDS, inflammatory & respiratory diseases, cardiovascular diseases, and hematology/oncology. On a positive note, Gilead reported third-quarter earnings above estimates, with top-line revenues of $6.58 billion, beating forecasts of 6% and growing 17% year-on-year. The company updated its full-year 2020 product sales guidance from $23 billion to $23.5 billion. Among the bulls is Oppenheimer analyst Hartaj Singh, who gives GILD shares an Outperform rating (i.e. Buy) and a price target of $100. Investors pocket a gain of 69% 69% play-out thesis. (To watch Singh's track record, click here) Supporting his position, Singh writes: We continue to believe in our thesis of (1) a reliable remdesivir/other drugs against SARS-CoV flares, (2) a basic business (HIV/oncology/HCV) that grows at low digits over the next two years, (3) operating leverage that provides higher earnings growth, and (4) a dividend yield of 3-4%. What does the rest of the Road think? Looking at the breakdown of consensus, the views of other analysts are more widespread. 10 Purchases, 12 Exemptions and 1 Sale add up to a moderate purchase consent. In addition, the average price target of $73.94 indicates a potential 25% increase from current levels. (Bloomberg) - Zhong Shanshan is setting new wealth records. The president of Nongfu Spring Co., a bottled water company that is ubiquitous in China, is now richer than Warren Buffett as his fortune has increased by $13.5 billion since the beginning of the year to $91.7 billion on Tuesday, according to the Bloomberg Billionaires Index.Zhong, 66, is now the sixth richest person on the planet. Nongfu shares jumped 18% in the first two trading days of 2021, bringing the advance from the September listing to more than 200%. They gained 0.7 percent wednesday. It's only the second time a Chinese national has entered the world's Top 10 - property tycoon Wang Jianlin reached number 8 in 2015 - and no one from the mainland has ever ranked this high in Bloomberg's wealth index since it was launched in 2012.Locally dubbed as the Lone Wolf to avoid club involvement by business or political groups , Zhong also took vaccine manufacturer Beijing Wantai Biological Pharmacy Enterprise Co. public in April. The stock rose more than 2,800%. Zhong dethroned India's Mukesh Ambani as Asia's richest person last week and is close to entering the rarefied realm of individuals worth more than $100 billion. Buffett is out of that group with a fortune of $86.2 billion, but Berkshire founder Hathaway Inc. His younger sister, Zhong Xiaoxiao, and three of his wife's brothers each hold a 1.4 percent stake in Nongfu worth $1.3 billion, according to the property listed in the company's prospectus last year. The company has produced dozens of millionaires, including other relatives and employees of Zhong. While Covid-19 disrupted much of the global economy in 2020, it was a good year for the world's ultra-rich. The wealthiest 500 people added $1.8 trillion to their fortunes and were worth $7.6 trillion combined by the end of the year. Zhong, Asia's biggest winner, has amassed more than $71 billion, the most since Tesla Inc's Elon Amazon.com Musk. It hasn't been seen in public since Chinese regulators torpedoed Ant Group Co.'s initial $35 billion public offering. His net worth has fallen by about $10 billion since October and is now the 25th richest person in the world.
