Terms of Use | The privacy policy of Rex 84, short for The Standby Exercises 1984, was a confidential scenario and an exercise developed by the United States federal government to detain large numbers of U.S. citizens who were deemed to be threats to national security in the event that the president declared a national state of emergency. The plan was first revealed in detail by journalist Alfonso Chardy in the Miami Herald issue on July 5, 1987. Possible reasons for such rounding would be the general opposition to the US military invasion abroad, such as if the US were to directly invade Central America. [2] [2] In order to combat what the government perceived as subversive activities, the plan also mandated the military to steer the orderly movement of the civilian population at national and regional level, according to Professor Diane Reynolds. [4] The existence of masterful military action plans (of which REX-84 was a part), Garden Plot and a similar previous exercise Lantern Spike was originally revealed by journalist Ron Ridenhour, who summed up his findings in an article in CounterSpy. [5] Transcripts from the Iran-Contra hearings in 1987 record the next dialogue between Congressman Jack Brooks, Attorney Olivera Northa Brendan Sullivan and Senator Daniel Inouye, The Democratic Chairman of the United Senate-House Commission:[6][7] [Congressman Jack] Brooks: Colonel North, u your work u N.S.C. you were not assigned, u at this time, to be on the plan for the continuity of government in the event of a major catastrophe? Brendan Sullivan , [North's counsel, upset]: Mr. President? [Senator Daniel] Inouye: I think this issue touches a very sensitive and confidential area, so I can ask that you do not touch it? Brooks: I was particularly concerned, Mr President, because I read in the newspapers in Miami and a few others that this same agency had developed an emergency plan that would break the American Constitution. And I was deeply concerned about that and wondered if this was the area he was working in. I think it was, and I wanted to get his confirmation. Inouye: Let me respectfully demand that we do not touch this at this stage. If we're going to get involved in this, I can arrange an executive meeting. Plans by the US government to round up people perceived by the government as subversive or a threat to the civil order have existed for decades. [8] For example, from 1967 to 1971, the FBI kept a list of more than 100,000 people who rounded them up as ADEX, I'M SORRY. An edited version of this article appears in CovertAction Quarterly, #69 Spring/Summer 2000. Foundations are set up for military law in the US, Ritt Goldstein, Sydney Morning Herald, July 27, 2002 Acquired from Whether it's a zombie apocalypse, alien invasion or nuclear war, there's no shortage of fiction that commands survivors who try to dig up life without an organized society or some form of authority. Many times fiction, such as The Walking Dead, is commanded by a complete lack of government or survivors to rebuild society, but because of real-life crises such as terrorist attacks or Ebola outbreaks, some cannot ask how they would survive a major catastrophe - or what the government would do to ensure some degree of continuation. But the reality is that the government has long planned how it would be implemented in the event of a major catastrophe, with Rex 84 serving as a prime but still controversial case. The readiness of the 1984 EXercise, or simply REX 84, was a plan that was developed to ensure continuity of the U.S. government in the event of a massive national or civil rights, such as mass immigration, a pandemic, war or widespread opposition to something like the US invasion of Latin America. The plan was developed by Lt. Col. Oliver North, who served on the National Security Council during the Reagan administration. To ensure the continuity of government and maintain some of the court order during the crisis, the plan called for the suspension of the U.S. Constitution and the appointment of military commanders to oversee state and local governments, while martial law would be implemented and control of the U.S. handed over to FEMA, or the Federal Emergency Management Agency. This plan would also test the government's ability to hold and move large sections of the population, which could include people with a certain political background or ethnicity. As strange and conspiratorial as REX 84 sounds, it is important that the concept of American citizens being detained during a national crisis is not new or necessarily unique to REX 84. The most rude example is probably Executive Order 9066, signed by President Franklin D. Roosevelt during World War II, to forcibly move certain American citizens from certain coastal areas to military-operated facilities. Although most of the Japanese were over-ed, citizens of the German and Italian ancestors were also affected. Under the executive order: Now, on the basis of the mandate assigned to me as President of the United States and the Commander of the Army and Navy, I hereby authorize and direct the Secretary of War and military commanders, who can appoint them from time to time whenever he or any appointed commander de believes that such action is necessary or desirable to prescribe military sites in such places and to the extent of such an extent. , as he or the relevant military commander may determine from which any or all a person may be excluded and in respect of which the right of any person to enter, remain or leave shall be subject to any restrictions which may be determined by the Secretary of War or the relevant military commander at his discretion. Later, Louis Giuffrida, director of FEMA from 1981 to 1985, wrote a thesis in 1970 entitled National Survival – Rasial Imperative during the U.S. Army War College. Although much of the thesis seems to be concerned with the history of racial conflict in the US, Giuffrida also touches on how the military will deal with a massive, racially charged crisis, such as how multiracial Army units would respond to delaying civilian ineligibility. In the highly unlikely event that the government orders the evacuation and detention of all black people from actual or potential trouble points, how and by whom would the order be enforced? What are the measuring rods for collection, evacuation and internment pacifist minority groups; or dissidents, potentially unfair elements; citizens whose only crime is an accident of colour? Where would the interns stay? . . . What would you do with black people in the armed forces, in the civil service and in Congress? The task would be too great for the Justice Department; this should greatly increase military force, especially from the United States Army. Giuffrida went to work with North, who served as a contact between the National Security Council and FEMA. Lt. Col. Oliver North during the Iran-Contra hearings on the REX 84 issue were even briefly discussed during the Iran-Contra hearings in 1987, a scandal that took the North into the national spotlight and made the North unframed in the eyes of the American public. Tail. Jack Brooks of Texas mentioned REX 84, who says he read the Herald article about the plan for inauthence and was concerned about possible changes to the plan. I was particularly concerned, Mr President, because I read in the newspapers in Miami and a few others that there was a plan that this same agency had developed, an emergency plan that would break the American Constitution, and I was deeply concerned about this and wondered whether this was the area in which it worked. I believe it was, and I wanted to get his confirmation. Instead of information, he told Brooks about Sen. Bernie Sanders. Daniel Inouye that the information related to the North's cooperation with REX 84 is of a very confidential nature and that information may be available during the executive session, although this further information was never available. The question is, should large parts of American citizens be moved or detained as a result of the national crisis – where would these people be detained? Fema trailer park near the University of New Orleans, circa 2006 Reportedly, witnesses claim that more than 800 such prison camps are being built and maintained by FEMA to house people displaced during such a crisis. While conspiracy theories about being camps to round up American citizens or signaling the incoming country's police, some of the alleged photos of FEMA camps show that they are a scam and are actual photos of completely unrelated facilities, such as a North Korean labor camp. However, FEMA offered little comment, while the small official information available suggests that the camps are aimed at illegal immigrants. Attention was recently drawn to REX 84 due to the release of Tom Clancy's video game The Division and this is Tom Clancy's upcoming note The Division 2. Drawing inspiration from REX 84 and a dark winter exercise, as well as Directive 51, the games depict a biological terrorist attack that has to score a series of sleeping cells that are activated in counter-terrorism, rogue factions and other criminals. But while the first game deals with new york city quarantine and then evacuation, it doesn't touch on other issues, such as where a large portion of NYC's population would be relocated or what effect such an attack would have on the rest of the United States. So what does REX 84 mean? Is this a sure sign that there will be an X-style takeover or that the government intends to go through the constitution? Well, it is important to look that any national government, let alone one as large as the United States government, would, of course, draw up plans to ensure some degree of preparedness in the event of a major disaster. However, it never hurts to remain informed and to ensure accountability for abuses of power. Responsible.
