Fairfax flea market dogs allowed

FAIRFAX DISTRICT, LOS ANGELES (KABC) -- The popular Melrose Trading Post reopened Sunday for the first time since it closed in March for the coronavirus pandemic. The flea market, founded in the 1990s, is held and raises funds for Fairfax High School. Sunday's restart came with changes aimed at implementing protocols to reduce the spread of COVID-19. Masks were required by employees, suppliers and visitors and the ability was limited to helping to impose social distancing. Employees are also required to undergo symptom and temperature tests when they arrive. The flea market is also for the first time offering advance sales for your $5 entry with a contactless entry option. Improved cleaning measures have also been implemented. The money raised by the flea market helps the school with programs such as field excursions and theatrical productions. You're supporting the school too, said saleswoman Eva Meara. That's a big deal. They give a lot to the kids, traveling. They do a lot of things. For sports too. It's a good thing.
