Founded in 1926, Fashion Industries is older and larger than many other CTE (Career and Technical Education) schools. Principal Daryl Blank, who has run the school since 2010, is not big enough to lose students, but not too small to offer a range of electives and activities to keep them engaged. The students we spoke to during our visit said they have great relationships with their teachers and enjoy internships, fashion shows and networking opportunities. The ratio of girls to boys in school is 10 to one. The girls say they like this because it's less of a distraction than their studies. There's a boys' club that supports men at school. For a CTE degree, students major in fashion design, graphic design and illustration, marketing or visual merchandising. The advisory board of representatives of the fashion industry is tasked with ensuring that these majors align with industry standards. Classes in these areas include digital pattern making, art foundations, photography, business law, entrepreneurship and window design. Students start with one CTE class each semester in a freshman year, and increase to three per semester for the junior and senior year. Most of the academic classes we saw had a traditional feel, with teachers running classes from the front of the room. In recent years Fashion Industries has expanded academic offerings, and students take four years of math and science, with the option to take an AP (Advanced Placement) account and biology. ELA (English language art) follows the EngageNY Common Core curriculum. This curriculum focuses on short and nonfiction texts, but teachers at Fashion Industries are trying to supplement and full texts. For example, juniors read Macbeth, and seniors read Macbeth, and seniors read Macbeth and senior turn into college success. To address this, fashion students now take a course in college access starting in the junior year. Trained peer mentors and faculty counselors are available to assist with applications. Alumni are hired to work with students between graduation and college start. I learned that you can't rely on students getting college prep at home, Principal Blank said. Another initiative designed to foster academic achievement is vocabulary term of the day (VTOD). Blank uses VTOD (that was the word reciprocal on the day of our visit) as he greets students every morning and reads his formal definition during morning and reads his formal definition during morning announcements. think it gives me a lot of street cred, he said. About a third of Fashion Industry students continue to study fashion in schools, and several have been admitted to private schools such as Bucknell, Ithaca, Brandeis or Columbia. Downside: It's hectic to get up there in a 10-story building in the morning, but the school has made sure the elevators work well in response to student feedback so teens are less stressed in the morning, Assistant Principal Danielle Silva said by phone. SPECIAL EDUCATION: For students with IEPs (individualized educational programs), Fashion Industries offers ICT (integrated accomplice) classes and SETS (special support services for education teachers). Special education teachers work closely with each academic department to ensure that their knowledge of the subject is strong. ADMISSIONS: Students must submit a portfolio and take the entrance exam. Every year Fashion Industries receives about 300 students in fashion direction, and 100 in graphic design and business programs. For questions, contact assistant principal/parent coordinator Danielle Silva. (Ella Colley, October 2015; update via interview, February 2018) Read more This school?
