I'm really happy with his costume, it looks great. A kind of combo between authentic outfit and fictitious outfit. I knitted the hat from a kit available from BellaKnitting.com I did this had for him to wear to the hospital, and he was the inspiration for the rest of the costume. I know the Vikings didn't wear horned helmets, that's one of the fictitious elements. The chainmail shirt is made of (I think) lame liquid. Silver on a black fabric background. It also doesn't need hemming (score!). I made the border of a wool ivory fleece looking and fake suede to look like a shear tunic under the mail. The belt is a strip of false suede sewn around the circumference of the tunic. It's a long time so it doesn't go up too high. In colder weather, I'll put a plain white, long-sleeved onesie under the tunic to keep it warmer, but the coat was enough to keep it warm in our 60 degree evening time. It's probably mostly fictitious, but it looks good. The pants and coat are polar - great because they are both hot and I didn't need a hem. I hate skimming. The coat attaches to the chainmail shirt with buttons - I didn't want to have ties near his neck - and the buttons recall the brooches historically used as ties in Viking clothing. I chose the red and green colors because they were also used in Viking clothing. It doesn't have weapons or shields because I didn't have time to make them and because GeekBaby is still too small to hold on to things. I could do it next week before Halloween, in which case I'll update this slideshow. For the costume, I started by cutting out the pieces of green glitter felt pattern and black fleece that I harvested from an old sweatshirt. If you use the model I created, be sure to read the labels so you know how many pieces cut each, what material to cut them, cut them, they need to be turned upside down. I started by sewing the pieces of green felt spin into the main body and also the tail pieces sandwiched the pieces of felt into the black fleece pieces with the straight sides together as shown in the photo. Then I sewed the other side along the tail piece together, leaving the bottom open to form an opening to stuff. Once I sewed both sides of the tail together, I turned the tail right side and stuffed with the poly filling and nailed the bottom edge closed. Finally, I tied the tail to the main part of the body by placing it with the sides straight together and used a zigzag point. These matching Halloween costumes totally unique mom and I spotted around Instagram (where else!) are equally adorable and amazing. Let's be honest: whatever Halloween costume you choose for your little one — a duck, a Disney character or a Subway sandwich — they're bound to look adorable. Really, what could be better than a cute baby? A super-cute baby and mom duo, that's what! Dare we say though, these 16 Halloween costume ideas matching mom and baby spotted on Instagram totally take the cake when it comes to kindness. So if you want to win Halloween this year, we suggest you steal one.
