Continue after continuing. When Washington D.C. voters decided to legalize cannabis, the city's push for a local regulated industry was immediately stifled by federal lawmakers. Since then, local regulators have remained blocked from creating a regulated, legal market. Legalization is still the law of the land, however, and some brave entrepreneurs have jumped into the district's cannabis market, regardless of their lack of regulation. In this Q&A;2, you can use the Q&A;2 A, Lonny the street lawyer discusses Washington D.C. cannabis gifting market i, his strategy of selling coupons for legal services (which are accompanied by gifts of cannabis), the growing success of Street Lawyer Services, his advocacy work toward cannabis conviction expungements, and more! Ganjapreneur: What is initiative 71 and how did it shape the development of DC's cannabis industry? Lonny Bramzon: This was a voter voting initiative, and in 2015, 65% of voters accepted it, which legalized cannabis in the District of Columbia. That's what made possession, legal cultivation, gift-giving legal. So when it happened, everything opened up and there started pop-up parties and dinners that were I-71 compatible weed everywhere – gifting weed, owning weed, consuming edibles, people cooking up meals and charging people to make donations, and all sorts of things. So basically, an entire underground farm opened up and even made its way to brick and mortar shops. I-71 heralded what is happening now introduces the proliferation of DC weed culture. After founding his legal career, how did he start cannabis? Well, I am a criminal defense attorney and represented a lot of people who have drug cases – and a lot of people in weed cases, especially distribution cases. So that was pretty common on my list. I mean, I represented a bit of each – but a lot of weed traders. Ironically, I am also a cannabis user. I've seen a lot of guys go to jail for the same stuff I consumed. I saw that it was legal in DC, and it offered you an opportunity. I understood Dc's culture. I understood cannabis, I consumed it. I represented many people – and I was involved in cannabis culture from so many different angles, so I had a very smooth transition. Fast forward to this day, the basis of my cannabis gifting shop is a marketing office for my legal services – a marketing office that promotes my legal services, which also have gifts of cannabis as a promotional product. Two worlds collide. Is the Street Lawyer Services coupon system different from other gift shops in DC? How does the coupon system benefit visitors? The visitor enters the store and seeks to services, you can purchase the coupon. Coupon. the coupon can be redeemed for the legal services of Lonny Branzon law firm and one of its partners. Coupons are bought for 50% of their value - this is the hook. You can buy a $100 coupon for $50 or a $120 coupon for $60. If someone has a case in court and knows they need a lawyer, it's reasonable to just walk in knowing they can buy the legal services. If you know you're going to spend $150 on a case, why not get $300 worth of legal coupons for $150? It saves money. So, look, I don't really keep up with what other people do. To my information, they're selling lighters or stickers or something like that – but people seem to like the coupon system. It seems to be more useful than what others do. Who visits the store and what contributes to the culture of SLS? You're not going to see a place where the crowds are more eclectic. The Street Lawyer Services crowd is the most diverse crowd you'll ever see - the old, the young, the rich the poor, urban in the countryside. People from North Carolina, Virginia, Maryland, New York, New Jersey – everywhere. All kinds of people come in because they like vibes. It's like you're part of something when you walk around the store – and we have the SLS women who are vivable with this thing. The quality of the gifts is very high, which attracts the crowd - but also this atmosphere. How do they increase the value of SLS Women in the visitor experience and what advice can they offer? The SLS girls are budtenders, brand ambassadors, music-playing, TikTok-dancing people creating the true family atmosphere of Street Lawyer Services. Not only do they know so much about cannabis, but they make anyone feel welcome when they walk into the shop – whether if it's a normal to shop or brand new to cannabis, they make everyone feel at home. How do you use your criminal background to fight cannabis legalization and what type of advocacy work does SLS participate in? So we are focusing on further isting cannabis-related criminal convictions. In most legislative bodies, the spread of tenure cases is widespread. The focus will be on felony cases because that's what affects people who are looking for work and want to move into certain homes. You know, if he was convicted of distributing cannabis years ago or at any time, that's a felony. So in most legal systems, you don't even get housing – that should be the focus because it's the felony convictions that really affect people's lives. That's what we need to focus on. Here's the thing people have served years and decades in prison for cannabis, what people are doing legally right now. You can't give them time back—but you can delete their records so they can live a better life. Thank you, Lonny, time to answer our questions! The presenter is criminal defense attorney Lonny Bramzon. He graduated from Stanford University with a degree in sociology and Columbia Law School. Lonny has the right to exercise the right in Washington D.C. and Maryland. After law school, Lonny spent his first year and a half in baltimore city prison, working at the Baltimore City branch. This was the time when Baltimore City had the highest number of murders in the country. His time in Baltimore sometimes included days when he represented 30 defendants. Lonny then opened a private criminal defense exercise in the D.C. Metropolitan area, with an emphasis on protecting major felony cases. He takes care of the defendants in Washington D.C., Maryland, and those who have federal cases in these jurisdictions. Lonny also represented individuals from Florida to Massachusetts on a Pro Hac Vice basis. He represented individuals who are charged with anything between possession of marijuana and first-degree murder. Lonny fought for thousands of defendants and continues to do so on a daily basis. Lonny wants to share with listeners/viewers how things really go down these streets, with law enforcement, courts, prisons and society as a whole. Lonny The street lawyer will make you think, look at something from a different perspective, clarify issues in your mind and hopefully change your life for the better.
