Ghana mali songhai worksheet

We are so excited to officially return to school! Last week, I shared some of our scientific plans. For history we will make a great unity on slavery and civil war. As we return to our routine, we'll spend some time learning about West African history just before the start of the slave trade. We will talk about the salt and gold trade and the growth of education and scholarships in West Africa. We talk about it before the kingdoms of Ghana (440-1200) and Mali in 12-1300 (well before the start of the European slave trade). We talked about it many years ago, but it's time to cover it again! ☺ We will talk about the first important ruler of Mali: Sundiata Keita who ruled from 1230 to 1255. Sundiata captured the capital of Ghana and the gold mines that had been under their control. Mali's influence then began to spread to the Sahara, to the south and west. We will then talk about his great-grandson, Mansa Musa, when Mali took control of the shopping malls of Timbuktu and Gao. Mansa Musa was a Muslim and made a famous pilgrimage to Mecca. He brought with him almost 60,000 people and more than 12 tons of gold! That made a huge impression. Europeans began drawing Mali on their maps. There are two books we are reading about these two leaders: We will then touch the Kingdom of Songhay and the military leader who became the ruler of the great empire, Askia Mohammad. We have a couple of free notebook pages that we will use again on the history of West Africa. These are free to download if you can use them. ☺ --LiesWest African History: Empire of Ghana, Mali and Songhai You may also be interested in some of the other posts we have about Africa from our unit several years ago: Next we'll learn more about the beginnings of slavery in the New World.
