Address 100% of tones, skin types and concerns. LET'S START Are you sure you have a natural-looking foundation tone? Here's a tip: If you need to apply it to your face to make it look flat, you're using the wrong shade. The goal is not to completely cover the skin; It's to find a shade that you only have to apply when needed and it really looks like you're not wearing anything. Finding the perfect tone is the single most important part of foundation purchases. If it doesn't look invisible, what's the point? It's a deal breaker, says Catherine Balagot, an accredited consultant at Clinique who works at Bloomingdale's in New York and has buyers matching the shadow. Many women are frustrated by the foundation, but when they find the right tone, they are so relieved and use that confidence, she says. Here he shares his expertise on how to find a shadow of your soul mate. Shop makeup-free. It may seem obvious, but starting with bare skin is an absolute necessity in choosing the right basic sheath. Chances are that if you're already dressed in the wrong shade, you'll probably do it again unless you remove it completely before trying a new one. The idea is to match your bare skin, not your current foundation. To avoid being at the bottom, make your foundation #nomakeup (or carry makeup removal wipes in your purse). Don't just go by the shadow names. You know the saying never judge a book by its cover? This also applies to finding the foundation's shadow. Shading names such as beige or yellow are not universal for all brands or even for different types of the same foundation Says Catherine. They can be a useful guide, but we always recommend that the consultant match the color, which is a free service. Also, remember that whenever the formula is different, such as liquid vs. powder, the same shade name can look a little different based on the interaction of its ingredients. Understand your tone. The colors under the surface of the skin significantly affect how the foundation appears on the skin. You can identify what types of shades you have by exploring the insides of your wrist. If your veins are blue, you have neutral underscales, which means you can use both cool and warm basic shades (lucky you!). If your veins look purple, you have cool shades that give your skin a pink tint. If your veins look green, you will have warm shades that will give your skin a golden tint. The main takeaway is that you want to choose a basic shade with the same shades as your skin. Clinique uses the following descriptions in all foundation color names: N for neutrals (best for cool and warm shades), P pink (best for cool undertones) and G golden (best for warm undertones). Color box 3 shades. While it's tempting to reach for a bottle that looks like the right shade, it's important to always try before buying. The best technique for finding the best shade is to choose three first, which seem to be a good match, and then watch them (apply a short line) side by side to your chin line, leaving a little skin between each one. One of the most common mistakes is choosing a foundation that fits only your face. It should also blend seamlessly into your neck as well, says Catherine. Confirm the winner. Once you've determined which color scheme looks best, remove the other two and fill in a small part of your chin line with the leading challenger. Now take a cotton towel soaked in makeup remover and sweep it into the middle of the patch. It's like an eraser. If you still see the difference between your naked skin and your foundation, it's not the right color, says Catherine. Take it for a test drive. It's not news that you should always check what your foundation looks like in natural light before committing. But when you buy a new foundation, it's sometimes easier said than done. At Clinique, we offer free foundation samples that last 10 days. This way, if a customer hesitates about the shadow and wants to try it, I can send them home with a week's supply. She can use it at work, outdoors at night and on weekends to really see if it fits well, says Catherine. You get shade seasonally. Even if you use sunscreen every day, it is inevitable that the skin tone will be slightly darker in the summer months and lighter in winter. Therefore, one shade of foundation does not all year round. When you start to notice that your foundation looks a little different, it's time to move on. Once you've created the shades that work best for you in the summer and winter months, you can even mix the two together to customize the right shade as you move through autumn and spring. Reminder: The average shelf life of a foundation after opening is about 2 years.
