Continental general insurance provider portal

When comparing shopping car insurance rates, you'll quickly realize how easy it is to save money by switching businesses – but is it really that easy to switch? Fortunately, the answer is YES! Change car insurance providers are relatively easy and painless as long as you do it right. The vast majority of car insurance providers allow you to cancel your policy at any time by sending written notice of the date of cancellation. When you switch to another insurance company, make sure there are no lapses in your coverage. You should make the start date of your new policy overlap with the cancellation date of your old one. A word of caution: When you cancel your current insurance policy, it is very important that you send them a written notice as specified in the contract. Failure to do so will cost you money and may damage your credit. Never assume that your policy will automatically be cancelled if you don't pay your next premium. If you don't give formal notice, they will bill you for the next payment, and your credit will be affected if you don't pay. Although it is very easy to cancel your car insurance, you should consider a few things before doing so. If you've been with the same insurance company for a long time, you're likely to have a long-term customer discount in place. But more importantly, your insurance company can cut you more slack if you have an accident or get a moving violation. If you don't want to save a significant amount by switching, and you've been with the same insurance company for more than 5 years, it's probably not worth the switch. TrueCar No-Haggle, CarsDirect and Ryde Shopper are the fastest way to see the lowest car prices in your area. These sites show you no-haggle prices from retailers closest to you – and the deals are usually really good. This should be the first step you take when negotiating your car price. Follow this up with my checklist to make sure you squeeze out every bit of savings. - Gregg Fidan Gregg Fidan + is the founder of RealCarTips. After being ripped off on his first car purchase, he devoted several years to figuring out the best ways to avoid scams and negotiate the best car deals. He has written hundreds of articles on the subject of car buying and taught thousands of car shoppers how to get the best deals. Types of Catering Insurance Catering insurance are a combination of insurance policy offers. General liability insurance and catering property insurance can be combined into a policy called a business owner policy (BOP). BOPs offer insurance coverages in one policy at a more affordable price than what you can use if you purchased them separately. Most Common Types of Catering Insurance Business Owner's Insurance (BOP) A Business Owner's Insurance, or BOP, combines property insurance, outage insurance, and general liability protection in a single package. A BOP helps caterers save money by having a reduced rate from bundling policies. Insurance companies price BOPs based on the value of the company's property, operations, and company location. Caterers with high-value equipment can generate Prizes. Some caterers may need commercial auto or workers' compensation coverage. These coverages are not in BOPs, so business owners typically have to buy separate commercial auto or workers' compensation policies. Commercial Property Insurance Commercial Property Insurance protects your catering business's business location and the personal property inside. In addition to protecting your company's building and its contents, commercial property can cover exterior fixtures such as outdoor signs and fences. Caterers may want to look for an additional cover called equipment breakdown. Coverage of equipment crashes helps pay for repair or replacement of damaged equipment from a covered requirement. Commercial General Liability Insurance Commercial General Liability Insurance protects your catering business from third-party claims for bodily injury, personal injury and property damage. It would cover medical bills, repair bills, and defense expenses. Personal injury claims such as libel and defamation would be included in your caterer's insurance coverage. Here are a few examples of events commercial general liability coverage would cover for catering insurance. Property damage: Commercial general liability insurance helps to cover a claim for damages on property. For example, a kitchen fire caused by your employee damages the building you rent to your catering company. If the kitchen fire destroys part of the building and your landlord sues you, commercial general liability insurance may provide cover. Personal injury: Commercial general liability insurance helps to cover a claim for bodily harm to your customers for whom you are found responsible. An example of a bodily injury claim is a customer slipping and falling on a wet floor at your catering business. The customer sprained an ankle and requires surgery. They sue your catering business for medical costs. If your company is found to be negligent, your company will be responsible for paying the claim. Commercial general liability insurance would help your catering business with this type of requirement. Personal injury: Personal injury claims you are responsible for from catering operations are also covered. An example could include a libel or defamation lawsuit your company is responsible for. Catering insurance can help with coverage for the covered claims and legal costs. Commercial car insurance In looking at your caterers insurance needs, you may realize that you need to cover your commercial vehicles. Commercial car insurance protects your leased, owned, unleased, and rented commercial vehicles. Commercial car insurance includes bodily injury liability, property damage liability, health insurance coverage, personal injury coverage, no-fault coverage, and uninsured motorist coverage. Extensive physical damage and collision coverage can also be added to your commercial auto policy. Packaging covers help save on the cost of catering insurance. Commercial car insurance also the drivers who drive commercial vehicles in business by paying damages and damage to property if you or an employee is driving your catering vehicle and responsible for an accident. Inland Marine Insurance An important topic for catering insurance covers business-owned property as it moves between storage and events space. Although commercial property insurance covers your company's property, it only does so at your primary business location. Inland insurance companies cover a catering company's property in transit and help replace it if it is lost, damaged or stolen. Inland soldier helps cover your catering business property for: Property in transit: Catering equipment you can transport from location to location Property in your temporary care: Someone else's property, you may have temporary possession of property that remains in a fixed but moving location: Equipment in a food truck equipment, but not the truck itself Caterers can sometimes get a BOP that includes inland marine coverage. Be sure to consult with your insurance agent to make sure you have all your catering insurance needs covered. Workers Compensation Insurance Workers' compensation insurance protects your employees and your business. It covers employees' work-related accidents, illnesses and deaths. It helps to cover medical expenses and lost earnings for employees who are injured at work. You may consider workers' compensation insurance if your catering company is ready to hire its first employee or has one or more full-time or part-time employees. Workers' compensation insurance is a requirement in almost all countries for caterers with employees. According to Don Grimley, owner of The Grimley Agency, these aren't the only cover types of caterers should consider. For food caterers, customers should look for the following coverage: Off-premises coverage for liability and content, liquor liability if serving liquor, and coverage or spoilage. Make sure that the right cooking is followed by the local health department. – Don Grimley, Principal Agent & Owner, The Grimley Agency Caterers Insurance Costs Caterers insurance costs vary depending on the policies you choose for your business. Annual prizes range from $465 to $1,070. Bundling more coverages on your catering insurance can help save money on expensive premiums. Catering Insurance Costs & Deductibles of Insurance Type Here are a few examples of factors that affect the cost of catering insurance. Number of employees: Caterers with five employees typically pay less for insurance than a catering company with 100 employees, partly because more employees create more exposure to risk. Property cover: Commercial property insurance costs are affected by physical size and location. A catering company with a small kitchen and office pays less than one larger one. Claims History: Catering insurance is usually less minor for caterers who have not filed an insurance claim, while caterers with a lot of claims often have higher premiums. Tips on getting catering insurance The following are tips to help with cost savings when they get catering insurance. Insurance premiums can be very expensive and it's good to know some tips for saving your catering business money. Bundle Your Insurance Policies Companies buy insurance can get discounts when they buy multiple policies from the same company or provider. For example, a BOP commercial general liability and property insurance aggregates at a reduced rate. Pay your entire Premium Up Front Your insurance policy can typically be paid monthly or annually. Many caterers choose to pay monthly to help with cash flow, but you may consider paying your premium total in advance. Businesses can benefit from savings from paid-in-full discounts. Proactively manage your risks Lower insurance rates apply to pure claims history applicants. You can develop social media posting rules, invest in a security system, and create security checklists or reviews to help lower your risk of claims. Caterers Insurance FAQ (FAQ) Determining your catering insurance needs can generate a lot of questions. Here are a few common questions caterers have about their insurance. Need insurance for a catering company? While catering insurance is not required, most businesses benefit from coverage. Your catering business probably uses delivery vans or other company vehicles which should be covered by a commercial car insurance policy. BOPs can also help cover your caterers insurance needs by bundling property insurance, business interruption insurance, and general liability protection at an affordable price. What type of insurance do caterers need? Insurance agents typically recommend buying a BOP, which bundles general liability insurance with commercial property insurance. BOPs protect your catering business equipment and pay for damage to non-employees while providing a reduced rate for bundling the coverages. What does the general liability of restaurant insurance cover? General liability insurance protects caterers from damage to third party property, damage and advertising damage. A BOP bundles general liability insurance with commercial property insurance. BOP will also provide cover for your catering business equipment. Bottom Line All caterers should consider getting caterers insurance to protect against risk and exposure in business. It can help protect your business from a lawsuit or claim.
