Howard University is one of the most famous historically black universities in the country. Historically black schools are higher education colleges established before the Civil Rights Act of 1964. Today they offer exceptional academic opportunities to students of all genders, religions and ethnic backgrounds. At Howard University, students have the opportunity to participate in more than 200 clubs and organizations as they learn from top professors. With Washington, D.C. just two miles away, students can easily lead an active political, social or professional life. Howard University's acceptance rate is 31.6%, and its ranking in the 2020 issue of U.S. News & World Report of the Best National Universities #104. Do you want to know your chances at Howard University? Calculate your chances for free right now. Want to know how much Howard University will actually cost you based on your income? And how long should your application to the school take? Here's what every student considering Howard University needs to know. This query is similar to Common Application Activities, but looks for details that cannot be explained in 150 characters. This stimulus is extremely common, and is known as the Extracurricular Essay. The goal is to better understand your most important activity and how it shaped you. You can see our complete guide on writing an extracurricular essay, but here we will also provide a breakdown. The first thing to do is to choose an activity. The best activities to choose from are: Where you have shown the most dedication Clubs or groups you have founded Those in which you have held the leadership role One relating to the personal aspect of your life. Howard also asks you to indicate up to 5 activities that might interest you on their campus. That would be another criterion to consider. Do you have high school equivalents to the university activities you listed there? If so, you might write about one of those high school activities. In any case, make sure you choose an activity that has had a major impact on your growth and for which you are truly passionate. After choosing an extracurricular or work experience to write about, describe your topic in a way that is personal and — story, not a professional summary. You talk about your achievements in terms of how they shaped and motivated you, not how they submitted your RESUME. Keep your activity descriptions as short as possible and write most of the essays on how your achievements in this activity are related to your personal goals and aspirations. Put the focus on you, not on the activity To narrow down the topic, consider a specific experience that has affected the arc of your activity. Choose the experience that shaped your decision about which academic and professional instructions you want to continue later. You may have auditioned for the lead role of the play for the first time and initially felt nervous excitement, but later you had theatre for love and now aspire to become a playwright. With a narrowed theme, you can start writing an essay in an anecdote format of one or two paragraphs. Incorporate thinking into your — and it's easy to get caught up in the details of your anecdote without showing how the activity shaped you. Let readers of Howard's confessions know what skills you have developed because of your activity, what personality traits you have strengthened, and whether the activity affects the way you live other parts of your life. Here's an example of an essay that flattens storytelling with substance. The writer explains the specific moment they play the piano, but continues to think about why the activity is important to them, what she taught them, and how it relates to their future plans: My fingers raced over the keys, quickly hitting one after the other. My body rocked to the music as my hands raced over the piano. Collapsing on the final chord, it was over as soon as it started. My shoulders relaxed and I couldn't help but break into a satisfied smile. I just played the third moon sonata movement, my long-standing dream. Four short months ago, I found that impossible. The tempo of the piece was incredibly fast, his notes stretching between each end of the piano, forcing me to reach further than I had ever dared. It was seventeen pages of the most fragile and complex melodies I've encountered. But that summer, I found myself ready to take on the challenge. At the end of the school year, I was relieved of my obligation to practice for bands and solos. Now I was free to determine my own musical path: either manage to learn the piece, or let it defeat me for the third summer in a row. During those few months, I spent countless hours practicing the same notes until they burned a permanent place in my memory, creating a soundtrack even for my dreams. Some would say I've mastered the piece, but as a musician I know better. Now that I can play it, I'm eager to take the next step and add layers of musicality and expression to make the once impossible work even more beautiful. Tips: This supplemental essay isn't just an opportunity for Howard's admissions committee to learn more about you — it's also a way to evaluate your writing skills and your ability to respond directly to a particular possibility. Always be aware of grammar and spelling conventions, change the structure of sentences, avoid passive voice and be (though not overly gaudy) with his choice of words. Try to avoid a cliché theme like a sports injury or a challenge. They follow the predictable arc of the challenge, working hard to overcome it, and then success. You can still write about sports, but do it in a way that is more unique. You can still cover a sports injury or challenge, as long as the plot line is different. For example, a unique story of sports injuries would be an injury and a decision to launch a podcast while you recover and how it has led to your professional interest in digital media.
