Whether people come to use electronic, WiFi, or check out books, The Cheatham County Public Library Director Mai Linger is excited to see more residents using library services. The Cheatham County School Board recognized Lingner and Ashland City Elementary School assistant Carmen Claudio at her June 5 meeting for their work in issuing more than 160 new library cards in the past few months. Many of the cards were issued to the District of English Students, and about 50 cards came from the recent Pre-K Carnival. In an interview with ashland City Times, Linger said the library's main goals are to promote early literacy and continuing education. We want to help facilitate these things, she said. All of our children's programs focus on early literacy. Library programs, would be Thinking Thursdays not only help promote employee childhood learning, but also allow parents and grandparents to participate. Students learn social skills and reap sensory development benefits from program activities; and parents are encouraged to join in the fun. Linger said it's not unusual for the library to receive 35 to 70 requests for library cards each month. To end the myth that people no longer read books, I circulated 98,000 books last year, Linger said. Although electronic reading of books is still popular, there is a new trend for people returning to books on paper. Print circulation has increased, Linger said. And although electronic circulation remained quite constant, she said she noticed a slight decrease. Linger said people come to the library for a number of reasons: programs, books, and use the library's computers and WiFi. They even checkout WiFi hotspots. Linger also attributes an increase in membership to the school's involvement. I am very excited to see an increase in visits to school, she said. I've had a lot of trips this year. Increasing the number of members means that the library must provide more services, even if their budget remains fairly stable from year to year. That means she relies heavily on Friends of the Library, she explained. We're lucky to have friends, she said. They organize fundraisers throughout the year to help us support us.
