Family medicine eor reddit

Welcome. I'm on FM this month, and since the list of topics for EOR is a million pages, I was wondering if anyone had tips for exploring high yields. That's what I have access to too. Case files for FM, SmartyPANCE, PAEasy, Lange and Flashcards, the first aid for the WardsMy commute to the clinic is about an hour each way, so I'm trying to find a good podcast that won't put me to sleep. Appreciate any feedback you guys have! Page 2 4 comments Hey all. I recently used OnlineMedEd to study family medicine because they have tons of board style issues and like didactic year, but worse now, I don't have time to study. I used a ROSH ton during didacticism. My question for those of you who have experience with both or one like OnlineMedEd or ROSH questions compared to EOR style issues? Page 2 3 comments I am a 2nd year PA student in my first rotation: Family Medicine. My program is for us to take PAEA exams at the end of the rotation. How should I study in these exams? Is the study of the plan adequate? How much detail should I learn about each topic? The family medicine plan has been going on for so long, and I'm afraid. I have Pance Prep Pearls, Smarty PANCE, and Rosh ReviewPage 2 17 comments Just took my first Rosh EOR and scored 70%, passing EOR is 75% for my program. I still have a few weeks left and haven't covered all the topics; but for people who have taken both ROSH and actual EORs, how do they compare? I heard ROSH may be a little tricky, but wanted to see what everyone here thought OfPage 2 11 comments Hello! I am a new Reddit user and a second year PA student. I am currently on my family rotation honey and my first EOR is only about 2 weeks old. I started randomly researching, doing Roche Review issues (I'm averaging 63% as right now) mostly. I'm at the point that I have a hard time reading a book like PPP or a training guide I found online. I just feel like I'm still so burned from didacticism and have trouble sitting down with a book to study. Initially my plan was to keep doing Rosh Review (I've heard from other PA students that once you're consistently above 70% you're good for EOR), but I'm starting to get a little worried that it won't be enough. I'm also freaking out a little bit because I honestly don't know what to expect for this exam. Any advice or experience of def is appreciated!! Thanks :)Page 2 22 comments This is my first rotation and I'm excited but a little nervous! Hi all. I recently started my first rotation in internal medicine. I often feel inadequate on the rotation (which I hope is normal given the first rotation), but it bothers me with EOR. I bought a raise exam from ROSH and scored 70% before studying any stuff earlier this week. For my program, we need to 73% on EOR exams to pass. I was wondering how hard you all found EORs, particularly internal medicine and are they a buzzword heavy, as didactic hasactic has often been? I'm not one to cram in, but it's hard to find a time when the clinic is all day and hour commute to one side (usually listen to physical assistant podcasts over that drive). My exam is in about 3 weeks and I have a lot of anxiety by looking at a long list of topics on the plan. Thank you in advance for any answers! Page 2 24 comments are now in my Family Medicine rotation and research more resources behind ppp and Roche review. At Uworld there is a bank of questions for family medicine doctors and was wondering if it would be useful to use? Currently preparing for the EOR exams and I'm curious who has the closest practice exams for the actual test. I have smartyPANCE and Roche as tutorials. Page 2 10 comments
