I really enjoy creating infographics using Piktochart.com. My 2014 edition was fun to do and a good infographic lesson. I would like to implement them more in my class and have students visually displaying geographic data. At first glance, good infographics are very clean, effective in their message and visually appealing. After some thoughts and attempts, they are not so simple after all. People get degrees in these things! The curriculum on the use of infographics requires vision and even perhaps some tutoring from an art teacher. Design and color, combined with information can be beautiful. Although I'm artistically inclined, I'm not formally dressed. I'm sure a professional would put me to shame, but here's my best try on my second edition of the INFOGRAPHIC FRQ and Exam Score. Some features are interactive, so accessing the attached URL is a little better for the eye. Piktochart has also made a presentation mode where you can present parts of the infographic piece piece by piece that is beautiful. Unfortunately, they changed the high-resolution savings option to a paid version of Pictochart, which I do not own. It's been another year and I feel like I'm a better teacher than I was before. After some assessment, there are a few exercises that I feel really help me get better than before. Here's my short list: AP Grading in June: This is by far the best professional development any teacher can get. We work hard, but we collaborate, record ideas across the table and engage in the most modest geography conversations I can't get anywhere else. I can't imagine missing this event and I look forward to it every year. This was the first year I went to the evening to meet the test committee and I actually really enjoyed it. While I think some people would take it as an opportunity to take out their frustrations, it's good to see the logic behind what makes our course run. One thing I would like the AP to consider is to create a defined set of guidelines on how to write for FRQ, LEQ, Short Answer and DBQ for all classes of AP humanity. With all the redesigns going on, there is a certain ambiguity between the short answer and the FRQ. While the short answer is currently irrelevant to human geography, it makes a difference for children moving from one social science course to another. Common ground is most useful and less confusing for both teachers and students. I hope it's something we see in the future. Instructional reports: I read my instructional reports after the AP results were published to see my weakest areas relative to my other colleagues. When we have a school. It gives me an opportunity to talk to other teachers about what they do in class, that I'm not. I use my FRQ verb prompt material that I created after searching all previous FRQs and seeing where students get the most points. When students know how many points they will get to define versus question explain, it can be a mental advantage. It is also important for students to know the difference between describing and discussing. Here is a link to the PDF file: FRQ Writing Command Protocols AP HuGe Facebook Group: WHAT A RESOURCE! Not only do I feel that this is better than not even the AP Central website, if my students have a question and want an immediate answer, I ask it and can expect an answer before the end of class. Other professionals on the site are so knowledgeable and helpful. We all learn the same thing, but with different resources and it's fascinating to see the creativity that comes from this group. I dropped my personal Facebook page about 4 years ago, and it wasn't until someone in reading convinced me to join the group that I made the decision to join back. While I still don't have a personal Facebook page, geography is the only reason I keep coming back. I believe it's the best resource beyond AP evaluation for professional development. Write test questions: The more test questions and hypothetical FRQ questions I create for my students, the better I am at helping my children know what to expect on game day. I know there are a lot of distressed teachers who feel that test banks have leaked online and there are problems with the safety of the tests. But cheating has always existed and will never go away, the best we can do is keep being creative and trying to adapt to the situations that have happened to us. Besides, we're teachers, I think we're the sexiest, most complex and most posh group of people on the planet. I know it takes time, but writing my own questions has been one of the most encouraging exercises for my professional growth. A group of teachers has started writing a bank of questions through a Facebook group and is in the form of a Google Doc. Let me know if you want to contribute. Unless the teacher provides a URL to the student, there is no reason anyone other than those with access can see it. 2 Comments on 2015 Edition ~ AP Human Geography FRQ and Breakdown Exam Home » INFOGRAPHIC » 2015 Edition ~ AP Human Geography FRQ and Exam Breakdown 2015 FRQ AP HuGe Breakdown DO2015-FRQ-AP-HUGE-Breakdown-DOCC < — -For multi-page printing LINK TO .
