Pokemon hunter j salamence

From Bulbapedia, the community Pokémon encyclopedia. J's Salamence (Japanese: J's Bohmander) is one of the Pokémon belonging to Pokémon Hunter J, as well as its most used. History Salamence made his debut in Mutiny in the Bounty!, the same episode as his Trainer. It serves mainly as J's mode of transport while it is not in its airship. It is also frequently used in combat. In Ill-Will Hunting!, J used Salamence and his Drapion to fight Ash's Pikachu and Gary's Blastoise. I tend to use Salamence for destructive purposes as well. In Pokémon Ranger and the Kidnapped Riolu! (Part 1), she ordered him to destroy a forest with her flamethrower to smoke the Riolu she wanted to capture. Later, in Pillars of Friendship!, J used his Hyper Beam to shoot down rock, ice and steel pillars inside the snowpoint temple and flamethrower to wake Regigigas. Salamence is also able to hold his own in battle against legendary Pokémon such as Regigigas and could also escape a volley of Hyper Beams from Brandon Regirock, Registeel, and Regice with ease. In The Needs of the Threel, it was used by J to get Uxie, Mesprit and Azelf for Team Galactic. It is not known what happened to Salamence after the destruction of J's ship. In Memories are Made of Bliss!, Team Rocket's fantasy featured Salamence with J. Personality and Salamence features doesn't seem to have trouble following J's orders, as evidenced by Pokémon Ranger and the kidnapped Riolu! First part when it was ordered by J to use Flamethrower on a forest just so J could capture a Riolu for profit. In most of the battles Salamence has fought, he has barely taken damage from all the attacks coming from his opponents and has had rapid movements that have allowed him not to get hit by them as well. Similar to Giovanni with his Persian, J seems to appreciate Salamence more than his other Pokémon, and it has been used more often by her. Movements Used Related Articles For more information about the species of this Pokémon, see Salamence. I read about anime antagonists and was hit in particular: Hunter J. What is Hunter J's strength in the Pokemon universe? I recently defended Ash and how he is a competent coach, especially during the championship season, but Hunter J seems to ignore that and completely erase all hopes of ash victory. In all their encounters, Ash functions only as a distraction with no chance of winning. His Drapion and Salamence have exceptional records of their own, easily defeating Gary and Ash Pokemon. Knowing this, how thin did you have Hunter J in the Pokemon universe? I between the conference league champion and the elite member 4. In the future, if it ever reappears with a mega-Salamence, probably Elite 4 level. Last updated: August 27, 2016 Hunter J would be between Frontier Brain Level and Elite Four Level. Not as strong as Alan. She has that Salamence so I will say that it is below the Elite Four level. The M V Ps yes, it is on the elite 4 level because its only drapion handled ashes and Gary in no time flat. Ace level of the gym leader. Nothing more. I have two rules: First of all, I'm never wrong. Second, if I'm wrong... back to the first rule, L - Death Note Elite Four level seems to be an overstatement. It wasn't that hard. She was pretty much gym leader level at most in my opinion. Which gym leader compares to his Drapion and Salamance? I find it hard to believe that even Wulfric corresponds to this power... Elite Four level seems to be an overestimate. It wasn't that hard. She was pretty much gym leader level at most in my opinion. Salamence and Drapion of J have muscular hydro pump of Blastoise and Thunder Bolt of Pikachu in this beam fight by a large margin, it is at least close to Frontier Brain Level at best. Hunter J was not dangerous because she was a good coach: she was dangerous because she was a brutal and deadly trainer. She was calculating and very willing to use lethal force, something champions only bluff. Everyone creates what they dread. Men of peace create engines of war. Invaders create avengers. People create... smaller people? Er... Children! I lost the word there. Children. Designed to supplant them. To help them put an end to. Momenta! Resistance. Rebellion. You'll burn those ideas. But it's the traditional royal voice Canterlot! It is traditional to speak, using the Royal we, and to use this a lot when addressing our subjects! Hunter J's strength is a little difficult for me to determine since the few times she showed up, she would mostly attack Ash as if she were aiming to kill him, but their battles themselves often had no results other than J giving up when his plans Foiled. I think she might be on par with the brains borders however based on his salamence management and how he held his own against Regigigas. :j Yes, she is on the elite 4 level because her only drapion handled ashes and Gary in no time flat. The same could be said about his Bohmander too, but then again, it's not like Satoshi and Shigeru are hard to overwhelm to begin with. So I don't think J is at the four celestial king level per se. Which gym leader compares to his Drapion and Salamance? I find it hard to believe that even Wulfric corresponds to this power... Many gym chef with strategy and knowledge how to defeat a specific pokemon the best. There are many out there who can defeat Hunter J. She only used her pokemon in a crude way like many other trainers with fully evolved pokemon. Justg brute force through. Drapion was decent and should it have been surprising that pseudo are shown to be strong? I mean, even Cameron had a nickname that was portrayed as a first-rate mon. It lacks real strategy and its pokemon lacks good utility shots. Wulfric Avalugg using the hail-/heal-gyro ball strategy would ruin it. I have two rules: First of all, I'm never wrong. Second, if I'm wrong... back to the first rule, L - Death Note The same thing could be said about his Bohmander too, but then again, it's not like Satoshi and Shigeru are hard to overwhelm to begin with. So I don't think J to four-level Heavenly King per se. In fact, I personally consider Hunter J cornering Ash and Gary as impressive, especially in Gary's case in Dp because he had strong pokemon with him from the beginning and he was still struggling with Hunter J pokemon irc. ^^ Well for one, she uses non-Pokemon weapons and breaks the mold. Its jellyfish laser can affect even legendary pokemon as much as potatoes or normal pokemon, making it incredibly dangerous in a world dominated strictly pokemon talking Pokemon. I guess. In fact, I personally consider Hunter J jam Ash and Gary as impressive, especially in Gary's case in Dp since he had strong pokemon with him from the beginning and he was still taken with Hunter J pokemon irc. ^^ yes, his Electvire and Blast were considered stronger than Pikachu at the time too. On another note, since mega-evolutions were introduced, it wouldn't be far-fetched that she would have a Salamencite (if she were still alive). Imagine Hunter J with a it's a whole new level of scary. I think she would at least be at Brandon's level at that time. I imagine hunter J would probably rank somewhere between Top Tier Gym Leader and Elite 4. It's tricky. On the one hand, she had a power in Salamence that would compete with Regigigas, Brandon's Regi Trio, Ash Pikachu and Gary Blastoise, but on the other hand, she has Ariados who the fighting force was not really known. It is difficult to classify it as E4 level when only 2 of its Pokemon (Salamence and Drapion) strength are known, but it seems stronger than any regular trainer and gym manager. I guess based on its success, it's more towards the E4 level though. She managed to evade the police and was known to capture many strong Pokemon for other trainers. Currently exploring Sinnoh Strictly Pokemon speak. I guess. Not having to rely on Pokemon is strength. Also, fortunately, she could never use Mega Salamence, as Mega Evolution requires a strong link with her Pokemon.
