The U.S. Labor Department reported Thursday that 6.6 million Americans filed unemployment claims in the last week, resulting in a total of about 16 million Americans, or 10% of the labor force, who have filed in the last three weeks. As the pandemic continues to upend the global economy, economists project 47 million U.S. jobs could be lost due to coronavirus, with unemployment reaching 32%. In addition to providing additional funds for unemployment insurance overall, the CARES Act includes a new program called Pandemic Unemployment Assistance (PUA), which extends benefits to workers who were previously ineligible, including about 16 million Americans who are self-employed, independent contractors and freelancers. Here's what workers can expect. Unemployment benefits will now include self-employed workers, including the self-employed, freelancers, farmers and arthritr workers. Self-employed persons with a limited liability company (LLC) or S company qualify. This is a major change for many gig workers, such as Uber and Lyft drivers, who are typically classified as independent contractors and are therefore not eligible to receive employee benefits, paid leave and health care from on-demand gig companies. Gig workers who have experienced reduced demand, and therefore reduced earnings, amid the coronavirus outbreak can now qualify for unemployment insurance to partially replace lost wages. will also be extended to people seeking part-time work and those who do not have a sufficient work history (usually one year) who were previously required to submit a Eligibility TweetIndividuals will have to prove that they have lost work as a direct result of the pandemic, including reasons such as being diagnosed with COVID-19, which is mandated by a health official to quarantine, providing care for someone diagnosed with the virus that provides care to a child who cannot attend school because it is closed, is scheduled to start a new job that is now closed or quit a job as a direct result of the pandemic. People who are able to work from home with wages and workers receiving paid time off are not eligible for unemployment benefits under the CARES Act.But if a telecommuter is unable to work due to becoming ill or taking care of another person because of the virus, they may be eligible. If a worker has exhausted his PTO and is still out of work, they may be eligible for unemployment benefits. Benefits paid under the new program will be modeled after Disaster Unemployment Assistance, which was created in 1974 to provide benefits to people who become unemployed due to a major natural disaster, including hurricanes, wildfires and major floods. Where possible, unemployed workers will receive a partial change of pay (about 46% on average) of the previously documented salary. At a minimum, newly eligible workers will receive half of the average unemployment benefit in their state. By January 2020, unemployed people across the country were paid an average of $385 a week, according to the Center on Budget and Policy Priorities. By state, average benefits ranged from $213 in Mississippi to $546 in Massachusetts.This benefit would last up to 39 weeks, or about 10 months, under the stimulus package. On top of that benefit, unemployed workers will receive an additional $600 a week for dates of unemployment from March 27, the day the CARES Act was signed, until July 31. After that, people who are still unemployed will continue to receive their government-administered benefit for the remainder of their 39 weeks. Let us say that the average worker will be unemployed on 27 January 2008. They will be newly eligible to receive about $190 per week (half the national average) plus $600 per week, for a total of $790 a week for up to four months until July 31. For the rest of their 39-week benefit window, or until about December 25, they will receive $190 per week. While the CARES Act makes these federal funds available to unemployed workers, states still need to individually sign the agreement and create infrastructure to accept new unemployment claims and pay for increased unemployment benefits. What's happening now is the U.S. Department of Labor has to issue guidelines for states on how to create these Pandemic services, says Michele Evermore, senior researcher and policy analyst at the National Employment Law Project. That said, I can't image a state not want to enter into a one with the federal agency to get these benefits out. Evermore adds it generally takes two to three weeks when someone has applied to actually get approved and start receiving payment. But given the surge in unemployment claims, I would imagine it takes at least three to four weeks now, she tells CNBC Make It. Some states may surprise us and get benefits out the door before that. New York's Department of Labor website already has instructions for newly eligible workers to get organized and file for Pandemic Unemployment Assistance when it becomes available. This week, Michigan Gov. Gretchen Whitmer signed on to create new state assistance programs under the CARES Act; guidance on new eligibility and increased benefits will be announced in the coming days. NYS Application Flowchart TweetMeanwhile, self-employed and independent contractors nationwide have expressed concern that they are unsure when they will be able to apply for Pandemic Unemployment Assistance.Until more clarity is available on a state-by-state basis, state agency administrators have read the bill, know the provisions and try to get them in place as soon as possible, Evermore says. I think states won't be too far behind federal guidance. Each state administers their own unemployment insurance program, so it's crucial workers check their state department of labor website for the most up-to-date information. Typically individuals must have the following information on hand to file an unemployment claim: Social Security number Home Address and Postal Address (if different) Phone NumberEmail addressBankname, address, address, account number and routing number for direct depositEsk employee name, address and phone numberFirst and last day worked with employerReason to leave or severance package information (if applicable) Workers are usually asked to provide their earnings history to calculate their unemployment benefits. However, self-employed workers, freelancers and independent contractors cannot quickly access and produce their previous earnings. Newly eligible workers should try to organize as much recent salary information as possible to have on hand when they are applying for unemployment for the first time, Evermore says. Tax documents are a start, but Evermore also recommends preparing invoices, bank statements, deposit notifications and other income certificates for at least the last year. Whatever information you have tells you how much you've earned, have it ready, Evermore says. Many state labor department offices have been overwhelmed with activity in recent weeks, resulting in site crashes and long wait times to contact someone by phone. To avoid overwhelming websites and phone lines, some states are advising workers to file a claim on a specific day of the week based on the first letter of their last name. When workers come through, through, payments will be applied retroactively to workers who have lost their jobs due to the pandemic as far back as January 27, 2020.The additional $600 weekly allowance will also be back-dated to March 27.Ultimately, Evermore's guidance is to remain tenacious. These benefits aren't going to be out tomorrow, she says. Just as we were queuing for toilet paper last week, this week people will have to wait to have their benefits filed. My advice is to be patient and keep trying. Expanded unemployment benefits under the CARES Act are in effect until December 2020.This story has been updated to reflect current unemployment figures. The DWD will provide the plaintiffs with additional information about the next steps they must take to receive the modified federal unemployment benefits listed in the new law when it has program rules from the United States Department of Labor (USDOL). DWD must wait for program guidance from USDOL before it can begin implementation of the new programs. There is no set timetable for when states will receive this guidance from the federal government. The state cannot pay benefits until it receives rules for these modified programs. When that happens, the DWD will work to implement the changes as soon as possible to provide these hard-to-charged benefits to eligible Hoosier plaintiffs. Highlights of the new law include: Federal Pandemic Unemployment Compensation (FPUC) will provide a $300 weekly add-on to regular unemployment insurance, Pandemic Unemployment Assistance (PUA) and Pandemic Emergency Unemployment Compensation (PEUC) paymentsPandemic Unemployment Benefits (PUA) have been amended to add 11 weeks of eligibility and new documentation requirements, showing proof of employment or self-employmentPandemic Emergency Unemployment Compensation (PEUC) is changed to add 11 weeks eligibility to a maximum of 24 weeks through 3/14/21Nonprofit and government entities will be refunded at a 50% rate through 3/14/21Ide the guide is issued, DWD will provide updates on the DWD website (www.in.gov/dwd) on DWD social media networks. THE DWD will work to make the necessary changes to continue to provide benefits to eligible
