Marge Simpson Some Enchanted Evening is the thirteenth and final episode of the first season. Although the episode was the first produced in the first season and series, with the production code 7G01 as opposed to later codes such as 7G08 from the first episode of Simpsons Roasting on a Open Fire, the production was delayed and overhauled after the working imprint[1] was poorly received and covered by 70% of the episode. That part of the episode had to be and changed, while airing Simpsons Roasting on a Open Fire because it is a Christmas special, must air it in

Christmas 1989 and becomes the first episode during this break, the first episode in the order of broadcast, and the first episode of the series instead. Penny Marshall performs as Lucille Botzowski. Synopsis Homer and Marge go out together, after Marge feels Homer takes her for granted. The couple face a slight dilemma when they realize they have no one to look after their children, so they hire a nanny named Miss Botz. Things seem to be going well, until Bart and Lisa find out something shocking about their nanny. Full story Friday morning, the Simpson family having breakfast together. Lisa and Bart have a tug for the doughnut, which is why the box opens, and Homer (who eats a doughnut, much to the outsmart of Bart and Lisa) reads the paper. After Bart and Lisa go to school, Homer goes to work at the power plant without noticing and saying goodbye to Marge. Marge and Maggie are left home alone while listening to Bill Pye on the radio. A short time later, there's a commercial coming on the radio that wants Marge to call Dr. Marvin Monroe therapy if he has a life problem. She does it, and she tells Monroe she's tired of Homer. At work, Homer hears Marge talking about him on the phone, as other power plant employees hear, and they laugh about it. Homer, who is embarrassed to hear Marge over the radio, later goes to Moe's Tavern instead of home that evening, where he asks Moe for advice. Moe tells Homer he should take her to a fancy restaurant, spend one night in a hotel and buy her flowers. At home, as an angry Marge waits impatiently to get home and tells him, Bart, Lisa and Maggie wisely stay away from her. Homer eventually buys her a box of chocolates and one rose, because flowers are very expensive. Homer comes home and tells Marge he loves her. Marge's complexion softens and tells Homer she loves him and apologizes for taking him for granted. Homer forgives Marge and decides to take her to where Moe suggested. Meanwhile, Bart made various prank calls to Moe's Tavern. However, his parents face a problem when they realize that their children have no one to look after them. To find the nanny, Marge picks up the phone and is surprised that Moe is still babbling at Bart about Oliver clozoff's prank and breaking up, assuming it's a crossed wire. She picks it up again and calls the rubber baby buggy bumpers a babysitting service. However, the receptionist immediately freaks out, telling her she must be joking when Marge introduces herself as Mrs Simpson. She quickly refuses their services to Simpson children because of their poor reputation with childcare service for a long time, which is in The Simpsons who are blacklisted to be guarded by them. Not giving up in the slightest, Homer then calls under the pseudonym Homer Samson, and hires a rather rude nanny named Miss Botz. When Miss Botz arrives (with two suitcases of dubious appearance), Marge (who is already spoiled for the night with Homer, who is also spoiled) tells her that Maggie must go to sleep immediately, but Bart and Lisa can stay up an hour longer and watch Happy Little Elves meet a curious bear cub (much to Bart's horror and hatred of elves). When Bart tries to suggest alternative viewing to avoid seeing elves, Ms. Botz quickly puts him in his place by mentioning that she has dealt with troubled children like him before and makes him watch a video with Lisa while she puts Maggie to bed. After a while, Bartu starts to get fed up with elves, so he plans to switch to America's Most Armed and Dangerous, where the host tells the audience about the infamous Babysitter Bandit, whose real name is Lucille Botzowski. The presenter also warns viewers that she may be using a clever alias. He then shows footage of the criminal on TV, who looks like Miss Botz. Later, as if on cue, Ms. Botz, who is actually a Babysitter Bandit, enters the room, which scares Bart and Lisa as they scream and run out of the room to hide. Bart hides in the basement, while Lisa enters the kitchen and tries to call 1-800-U-SQUEAL by phone. When Ms. Botz tries to look for Bart in the basement, she tries to knock her out with Marge's bowling ball, but to no avail as Bart falls to the floor and Ms. Botz notices him, so she catches her. In the kitchen, Lisa reports on the phone about Ms. Botz, but Ms. Botz is behind her, pulling her rope. Lisa notices it, but just like when she's in the middle of reporting on a thug, Ms. Botz catches Lisa. In the living room, Ms. Botz puts Bart and Lisa on the couch and ties them up. Bart continues to talk and sing that he won't get away with it, making Miss Botz a tape of Bart's mouth, so he's gagged and ucannot speak. Ms. Botz turns on the Happy Little Elves video again, which bothers Bart a lot more while making sounds under the tape. In the end, the self-adhesive Lisa tells him to keep his head down and make the best of the situation. Meanwhile, Homer and Marge are enjoying a fancy dinner at Chez Patee, with lobsters. Once they're done with their meal, they head to the Ye Olde Off-Ramp Inn, where Marge has some time together with Homer in their hotel room. In the house, Maggie wakes up and comes downstairs to find her siblings tied up, just as she ends up a video of Happy Little Elves. Bart finally had it with the elves, so he got his head on the couch in anger. Lisa tells Maggie she'll be able to watch the video again if she put it on. accordingly, saves the day once again. The children decide to plan a strategy to kidnap Miss Botz. Maggie climbs the stairs and is located near her parents' room, where Lucille Botzowski robs their closet. Botzowski, tired of the incompetent and annoying Simpson children, accompanies Maggie's paced pac duda and enters Bart's room with the lights off, where Bart hits her over the head, wailing her with a baseball bat. Turns out Bart also used Maggie's paco to accomplish the work. Meanwhile, Marge reveals there is no answer at home because Miss Botz disabled all phones in the house. At home, with no way to call a thug from their home, Bart, Lisa and Maggie rush outside to a local pay phone and alert the authorities, but not before pipping Lucille Botzowski and ceding her mouth, then forcing her to watch a video of Happy Little Elves. Marge and Homer are coming home, still worried they won't get an answer. Eventually, they find Lucille Botzowski with her mouth tied up and gagged, and after they untie her, she begs them to convince the tape and warn Homer not to take his eyes off Bart for a second. They then send her home with all her suitcases (containing stolen items, which Homer and Marge didn't notice), plus three times her regular salary. Police then arrive along with the media, but as Bart tries to take them into the living room, Homer grabs Bart by the shirt and begs him for behaving towards Ms Botz. However, Homer is cut by a reporter who asks if he is saying he unknowingly helped escape the babysitter bandit. Realizing his mistake, a humiliated Homer tries to save face by claiming he fought Ms Botz before fleeing, to the astonishment of the children. Later, Homer and Marge are in bed, where Homer watches himself look stupid on television, so he turns it off as he laments that the entire community has labeled him a sis, with the reassub office that he's just not that bright. Marge says he loves him the way he did, and that if he has three kids who managed to catch a criminal on their way, he must be doing something right. He then kisses Homer as he turns off the sleeping lamp. Behind the laughter production The episode's working press is the first to return from Korea as episodes of The Simpsons are often animate abroad to South Korean animation studio AKOM due to episode overload and cost savings in Korea. Simpsons Shorts where everything is produced in-house in Klasky-Csupo although the home studio produces only the character and background look of the episodes. The original, rough version of Some Enchanted Evening is incomplete because it ends when Bart and Lisa learn that Ms. Botz is the most wanted in America, and the sound effects and soundtrack are absent and would have been inserted if there had been a final version. The (song) print was not well received at gracia films bungalow, and James L. Brooks responded with profanity. Some enchanted evening was the first produced, explaining why 7G01 Producers wanted a realistic environment for The Simpsons because other studios had unrealistic animation styles such as Disney, Warner Bros., Hanna-Barbera, etc. The former two had a universe in which the universe was bent and the characters seemed to be made of rubber. Hanna-Barbera used cartoon sounds that were also rejected. Although shorts lacked much realism in animation, the half-hour series was supposed to be as realistic as it could be despite the unrealistic animation. 70% of episodes had to be re-episodes. The episode was worked on during the first season until it finally aired on May 13, 1990 as the season finale. Producers considered discontinuing the series if the next episode, Bart the Genius has similar production difficulties although luckily he had several fixable animation issues. They convinced FOX to postpone the season premiere for a few months. Although Simpsons Roasting on an Open Fire, the eighth episode in production order, had to be aired because it was a Christmas special in December 1989, becoming the first episode of the first season and the first episode of The Simpsons in total. Also at the end of this episode, originally Marge will discover that under her blonde hair contained a pair of bunny ears. This is a clear reference to Matt Groening's comic book, Life in Hell. But this area has been scraped off for unknown reasons. This theory made it into $ Arcade Game. When marge gets electrified in the game, you can see rabbit ears in your hair.
