The book is a biographical novel about Cedric Jennings' life through his senior year of high school and first years of college. [1] It details his life in Ballou High School, an inner city school in Washington, D.C., and into Brown University, which Cedric attends after High School. The book depicts the problems of education systems in the inner city and how students from these systems are affected throughout their lives. In 2008, the book was selected as part of the One Maryland, One Book program. [2] Plot Cedric Jennings is an anomaly at Ballou High School in the Southeast Neighborhood of Washington, D.C.: in a poorly performing school where academic achievement is mocked, Cedric proudly strives for high grades with a desire to attend a top university. The sub-par standards on Ballou place him at a clear disadvantage academically, while frequent taunts and physical threats from other students have alienated him socially. Cedric lives with his mother, Barbara Jennings, who works for the Department of Agriculture; his father Cedric Gilliam is a drug dealer who is currently in prison. In his first year, Cedric is admitted to the Minority Introduction to Engineering and Science (MITES) summer program at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology. He believes this is the beginning of a new life for him, but when summer comes he finds classes much more difficult than his fellow MITES students who attended better schools and were better versed in math and science. Although he makes friends at MIT, he also sees that his ghetto background sets him apart from them. At the end of the program, Cedric is told by faculty director Leon Trilling that he would not be welcome in MIT as a college student. Synopsis At Ballou Senior High, a school besieged by violence in Washington, D.C. honorary students have learned to keep their heads down. Like most inner-city children, they know that any particular attention in a place this dangerous can make you a target of violence. But Cedric Jennings will not swallow his pride, and with unwavering support from his mother, he studies and strives as if his life depends on it—and it does. The summer after his junior year, on a program for minorities at MIT, he gets a fleeting glimpse of life outside, a glimpse that turns into a face-on challenge a year later: acceptance at Brown University, an Ivy League school. On Finding himself far behind most of the other freshmen, Cedric must deal with a confusing array of intellectual and social challenges. Cedric had hoped that in college he would finally find a place to fit in, but he discovers that he has little in common with either the white students, many of whom come from privileged backgrounds, or middle-class blacks. Having traveled too far to turn back, Cedric is left to rely on his faith, his intelligence and his determination to keep alive his hope in the invisible- a future of acceptance and reward that he struggles, every day, to imagine. [3] Critical and commercial success. It was chosen by the New York Times, Chicago Tribune, Washington Monthly and Booklist as one of the best books of the year. [4] The New York Times Book Review called it an extraordinary, formula-shaking book. David Halberstam called it A Beautiful Book of a Heroic American Struggle. [5] The book has been a regular selection in college courses on American culture, education, sociology and creative writing, and has been a mandatory reading for incoming freshmen at many universities. In 2008, the book was selected as part of the One Maryland, One Book program. The book was particularly known for its influence on the debate on affirmative action. When it was released in 1998, affirmative action had become one of the foremost domestic social issues facing the country. In its review of the book, CNN explained as more voters, politicos and talk-show hosts write off affirmative action. I was against it, now I'm in favor of it. The Agent of Change was a mind-opening book - A Hope in the Invisible by Ron Suskind. [7] The book drew also high praise for its innovations to writing styles - using exhaustive reporting to place readers inside the heads of characters. The Chicago Tribune called the book, the new, new nonfiction. [8] On March 25, 2009 All Things Considered ran a segment about A Hope in the Unseen on NPR. During the segment, Susan Jane Gilman, the author of Undress in the Temple of Heaven, described her affinity for Suskind's work. Suskind's literary talent is a double pipe. He is a Pulitzer Prize-winning journalist who lived with Jennings up close for years. But he is also a master storyteller with a poet's poetry. DescriptionThe inspiring, true coming-of-age story of a fiercely determined young man who, armed only with his intellect and willpower, fights his way out of despair. In 1993, Cedric Jennings was a bright and fiercely determined honor student at Ballou, a high school in one of Washington D.C's most dangerous neighborhoods, where dropouts were far in double digits and only 80 of more than 1,350 boasted an average of B or better. At Ballou, Cedric had almost no friends. He ate lunch in a classroom most days, plowing through the extra work he asked for, knowing that he really competes with children from other, harder schools. Cedric Jennings' driving force —which was fully supported by his powerful mother—was to attend a top college. In September 1995, after years of near superhuman devotion, he realized that ambition when he started out as a freshman at Brown University. But he didn't leave his fight behind. He found himself unprepared for college: he struggled to master class work and fit in with the white upper-class students. Having traveled too far to turn back, Cedric was left to rely on his intelligence and reward. In this updated edition, A Jump in the Unseen Chronicles Of Cedric Odyssey during his final two years of high school, follows him through his difficult first year at Brown, and tells the story of his subsequent success in college and working life. Eye-opening, sometimes humorous, and often deeply moving, a hope in the invisible weaves a crucial new thread into the rich and ongoing story of the American experience. Between the political turmoil and the novel coronavirus (COVID-19) pandemic, it is difficult to look back on the year and find anything, that was a potential bright spot in an otherwise turbulent journey around the sun. Fortunately, there were some bright spots: namely, some of the excellent works of military history and analysis, fiction and non-fiction, novels and graphic novels that we have absorbed over the past year. Relocation (which won the National Book Award), so missionaries were high on my list of must-reads when it came out in October. It took Klay six years to research and write the book, which follows four characters in Colombia that come together in the shadow of our post-9/11 war. As Klay's prophetic novel shows, the machinery of technology, drones and targeted murders built on the Battlefield of the Middle East will continue to grow in distant countries that rarely make headlines. Graff cleverly explains the timeline of that day by repaying of those who lived it, including the loved ones of those who were on the scene in New York, and the service members who work in the Pentagon. My only suggestion is not to read it in public – if you're something like me, you'll consistently remain in tears. Haley Britzky, Army Reporter The Body in Pain: The Making and Unmaking of the World by Elaine ScarryWhy are we even fighting war? Wouldn't a massive tennis tournament be a nicer way for nations to resolve their differences? This is one of the many questions Harvard professor Elaine Scarry attempts to answer, along with why nuclear war is akin to torture, why the language around war is sterilized in public discourse, and why both war and torture unmake human worlds by destroying access to language. It's a big boost of a read, but even if you just read chapter two (like I did), you'll get away thinking about war in new and refreshing ways. [Buy] Katherine Rondina, Anchor Books Since I published a new book this year, I've answered questions about my inspirations. This means that I have thought about and so grateful for The Girl in the Flammable Skirt by Aimee Bender. I can't credit it for wanting to be a writer—that desire was already there—but it inspired me to write stories where the amazing complicates the ordinary, and the impossible becomes possible. A girl in a nice dress with no one to appreciate it. An ordinary boy with a remarkable talent for finding things. The stories in this book taught me that my world's everyday life could become magical and strange, and in that strangeness I could find a new kind of truth. Diane Cook is the author of the novel The New Wilderness, long listed for the 2020 Booker Prize, and the story collection Man V. Nature, which was a finalist for the Guardian First Book Award, the Believer Book Award, the Believer Book Award, the PEN/Hemingway Award and the Los Angeles Times Award for First Fiction. Read an excerpt from The New Wilderness. Bill Johnston, University of California Press I've revisited a lot of old favorites in this grim year of fear and isolation, and have been most grateful of all for The Collected Poems of Frank O'Hara. Witty, reflexive, intimate, gueer, disarming at times and monumentally serious at once, they have been a constant balm and inspiration. The only thing to do/can you can because it's the only thing to do. Helen Macdonald is a nature essayist with a semiregular column in the New York Times Magazine. Joy has been hard to come by this year, and I am so grateful for this book for the joy it brought me. Jasmine Guillory is the New York Times bestselling author of five novels, including this year's Party of Two. Her work has appeared in O, The Oprah Magazine, Cosmopolitan, Real Simple, and Time. Nelson Fitch, Random House Last year, stuck in a long-running reading rut that left me wondering if I even liked books anymore, I stumbled across December 10th by George Saunders, a collection of stories Saunders wrote between 1995 and 2012 that are on turns funny, moving, startling, weird, deep, and often all these things at the same time. As a writer, what I crave most from books is finding such an excellent one it makes me feel like I would be better off quitting—and so wonderful that it reminds me of what it is to be a pure reader again, encountering new worlds and revelations every time I turn a page. Tenth of December is, and I am so grateful that it fell from a high shelf and into my life. Veronica Roth is #1 new york times bestselling author of the Divergent series and Carve Mark duology. Ian Byers-Gamber, Blazevox Books Waking up today to the prospect of some hours spent reading away part of another day of this disastrous, delirious pandemic year, I'm most grateful for the book in my hands, one itself full of gratitude for a life spent reading: Gloria Frym's How Proust Ruined My Life. Frym's essays — about Marcel Proust, yes, and Walt Whitman, and Lucia Berlin, but also peppermint-stick candy and Allen Ginsburg's knees, among other Proustian memory-prompts — restore me to my sense of my uncanny happiness in a life spent rushing to the next book, the next book, the next book, the next book, the next book and National Book Critics Circle Award winner Motherless Brooklyn. His latest novel, The Arrest, is a post-apathetic tale of two siblings, the man who came between them, and a nuclear-powered supercar. David Heska Wanbli Weiden, Riverheadl am incredibly grateful for the magnificent The Heartbeat of Wounded Knee by David Treuer. This book — a mélange of history, memoirs and reportage — is the reconceptualization of Native life that has been urgently needed since the last great indigenous history, Dee Brown's book, and it rejects the standard narrative of Native victimization, conquest and defeat. Although I teach Native American studies to students, I found new insights and revelations in almost every chapter. Not just a great read, the book is a huge contribution to Native American — and American and cultural history. David Heska Wanbli Weiden, an enrolled member of the Sicangu Lakota Nation, is the author of the novel Winter Counts, which is BuzzFeed Book Club's November election. Harrow the ninth reminded me that even when absolutely everything is terrible, it is still possible to feel deep, pleasing, brain buzzing admiration for brilliant art. Thank you, Harrow, for being one of the brightest spots in a dark year and for keeping the home fires burning. Casey McQuiston is the New York Times bestselling author of Red, White & amp; Royal Blue, and her next book, One Last Stop, is due out in 2021. I am grateful for V.S. Naipaul's troublesome masterpiece, A Bend in the River— which not only made me see the world again, but made me see what literature could do. It is a book that is lucid enough to reveal the brutality of the forces that shape our world and its politics; yet soulful enough to penetrate into the most recondite secrets of human interiority. A book of great beauty without a moment of mercy. A marriage of opposites that continues to shape my own deeper sense of how much a writer can actually accomplish. Ayad Akhtar is a novelist and playwright, and his latest novel, Homeland Elegies, is about an American son and his immigrant father seeking belonging in a post-9/11 country. I am immensely grateful for Patricia Highsmith's plotting and writing suspense fiction. As a writer, I am grateful for Highsmith's generosity with her wisdom and experience: She talks about how to know when things go wrong, even how to decide to give things up as a bad job. She is unabashed about sharing her own failures, and in my experience, there is nothing more encouraging for a writer than learning that our literary gods are mortal! As a reader, it provides a fascinating insight into the rise of one of my favorite novels of all time — The talented Mr. Ripley, as well as the rest of her brilliant oeuvre. And since it's Highsmith, it's so much more than just a how-to guide: It's hugely engaging and, while available, also provides an insight into the mind of a genius. I've read it twice — while working on each of my thrillers, The Hunting Party and The Guest List — and I know I'll be returning to the well-thumbed copy of my shelf again soon! Lucy Foley is the New York Times bestselling author of thrillers The Guest List and The Hunting Party. She has also written two historical fiction novels and previously worked in the publishing industry as a literary editor. The books I'm most grateful for this year are a three-book series titled Tales from the Gas Station by Jack Townsend. Walking a fine line between comedy and horror (which is much harder than people think), the books follow Jack, an employee of a gas station in an unnamed city where all sorts of scary amazing things happen. And while the monsters are scary and more than a little ridiculous, it's Jack's bone-dry storytelling, along with his best friend/emotional support man, Jerry, who elevates the books to something as lovely as they are absurd. T.J. Klune is a Lambda Literary Award-winning author and an ex-injury ector for an insurance company. His novels include The House in the Cerulean Sea and The Darku (Team Black Image Studio), Ayebia Clarke PublishingNervous Conditions is a book that I have read several times over the years, including this year. The novel covers themes of gender and has at the center Tambu, a young girl in 1960s Rhodesia determined to get an education and to create a better life for herself. Dangarembga's prose is evocative and witty, and the story is thought-provoking. I've been inspired again by Tambu every time I've read this book. Peace Adzo Medie is senior lecturer in gender and international politics at the University of Bristol. She is the author of Global Norms and Local Action: The Campaigns to End Violence against Women in Africa (Oxford University Press, 2020). His only wife is her debut novel. Jenna Maurice, the HarperCollins Book I'm most grateful for? Where the sidewalk ends by Shel Silverstein. My mother and father would read me poems from it before bed – I'm convinced it infused me not only with a sense of humor. Victoria V.E. Schwab is the bestselling author of more than a dozen books, including The Vicious, Shades of Magic series and This Savage Song, Her latest novel. The Invisible Life of Addie LaRue, is BuzzFeed Book Club's December election. Read an excerpt from The Invisible Life of Addie LaRue, is BuzzFeed Book Club's December election. Read an excerpt from The Invisible Life of Addie LaRue, is BuzzFeed Book Club's December election. it's still my favorite book of all time. I love how it defies genre (it's a political thriller/YA romance that includes a lot of scientific research and even poetry??), and how it values smartness, gutsiness, vulnerability, kindness, and a sense of adventure. The book follows 16-year-old Vicky Austin's life-changing journey to Antarctica; her journey changed my life too. In a year when safe travel is almost impossible, I am so grateful to be able to return to its story over and over again. Kate Stayman-London's debut novel, One to Watch, is about a plus-size blogger who has been asked to star on a Bachelorette-like reality show. Stayman-London served as the leading digital writer for Hillary Rodham Clinton's 2016 presidential campaign and has written for remarkable figures, from former President Obama and Malala Yousafzai to Anna Wintour and Cher.Katharine McGee is grateful for the Redwall series by Brian Jacques. I discovered the series in elementary school, and it triggered a love of big, epic stories that have never left me. (If you read my books, you know I can't resist a wide cast of characters!) I used to read the books aloud to my younger sister, with funny voices for all the storytellers. Now that I have a little boy of my own, I can't wait one day share Redwall with him. Katharine McGee McGee New York Times bestselling author of American Royals and its sequel, Majesty. She is also the author of the Thousandth Floor trilogy. Beth Gwinn, Time-Life BooksI'm most grateful for books that carry me out of the world and back again, and while I find it painful to choose from among them, here's an early and a late: Zen Cho's Black Water Sister, which comes out in 2021 but I devoured just two days ago, and the long out-of-print Wizards and Witches volume Time-Life Enchanted World series, which is where I first read about the legend of Scholomance. Naomi Novik is the New York Times bestselling author of the Nebula Awardwinning novel Uprooted, Spinning Silver, and the nine-volume temeraire series. Her latest novel, A Deadly Education, is the first in the Scholomance trilogy. Christina Lauren, Little, Brown and Company We are grateful for the Twilight series for about a million reasons, not least as it is what brought the two of us together. Writing fanfic in a space where we could be silly and messy together taught us that we don't have to be perfect, but there's no harm in trying to get better with every try. It also cemented to us that the best relationships are the ones where you can be your real, authentic self, even as you struggle to do things you never thought you'd be brave enough to try. Twilight brought millions of readers back into the fold and inspired hundreds of romance writers. We really thank Stephenie Meyer every day for the gift of Twilight and the fandom it created.
