Humans have strengths and skills to do everything. But often they can't function properly, and that is why human development takes advantage of the ability and experience to improve human endeavors and become an effective member of a society that can be transformed. Human development seeks to achieve several goals, including: * Engage in the formation of a human personality in a way that helps him keep up with development and to meet challenges. * Allows a person to communicate with others, express themselves without need for everyone, and to establish a good relationship between him and those around him. Improve your thinking level and how to achieve your goals and gain self-confidence. * Adopting positive thoughts and rejecting negative thoughts that focus on the negative aspects that exist in society and human life. Developing the spirit of teamwork and the ability of individuals to communicate positively among members. * Alert a person to be aware of concepts that help him succeed, such as the importance of time and the best way to take advantage of it. * Help the person to fix the problem he touches and find the right solution for this. The concept of human development became clear after the end of World War II and the exit of the countries that participated in the war was the shock of human annihilation and the enormous economy, especially the lost country. Then the concept of development began to develop. It comes with the emergence of human development as a rapid development to achieve the speed of exiting dark tunnels and mass destruction that has occurred in the country by war. From today, the United Nations has begun implementing a human development policy against poor countries to help it emerge from its poverty situation, as it has done with Bangladesh, Pakistan, Ghana, Colombia and other countries. Take advantage of the advanced experience of the country to follow this platform. The concept of human development has evolved to include many areas, including: administration, politics, education and culture, and humans as contributors in all areas of the previous. Therefore, building development: political management, education and culture have an impact on the individual development process in terms of development, skills model, teamwork and public participation in the development process for the purpose of using them. The approach to human development is therefore the cornerstone that planners and decision-makers rely on the creation of conditions for social and economic development and social development on the path of prosperity and well-being. A brief of the book's acronym, slightly edged slightly by: Ali Muhammad Ali. The original author of the book: The summary of the original book: Quotes from the book: Successful people do what unsuccessful people do, do not want. The truth is that what we do is important. What you're doing today is important. What you do every day is important. Successful people succeed in doing things. They do not make a difference in their actions, and they repeat them until the compound effect begins. Successful people do everything they can to get the job done, whether they feel it or not. Trying to get rid of unwanted habits is like trying not to think about Phil (the more you try not to think about it, the more you're going to think about it.) That's because what you're focused on is growing, that's why people who put a lot of energy into focusing on things they don't want to talk about, think about or complain about or worry about often getting that rubbish. It's hard to get rid of habits you don't want to face. The way to do this is to replace unwanted habits with one another that you want. Creating new and better habits, those who empower you and serve you, is what you know how to do it. You can do the same as you create any habit you have: step by step. Baby Steps Slightly Edge The only person you expect to become is the one you decide to be - Ralph Waldo Emerson (attrib.) instead of writing what you are doing (you may do it your entire adult life anyway and don't make you better at doing it). Write at the end of the day what you did that day. Every time you see what looks like a breakthrough, the end result is usually the end of a long series of small things, which are done continuously over time. Quotes from the book: Your happiness is influenced by 1) your perspective, such as how you choose to view events and situations in your daily life 2) Specific actions that have a positive impact- things like writing three things you are grateful for, or sending discretionary emails, random acts of kindness, practicing forgiveness, meditation, practicing; It has personal meanings. People live on the curve of success, a life of responsibility. They take full responsibility for who they are, where they are and everything that happens to them. There are two types of habits: habits that serve you and those that don't serve you. Whenever you see what looks like a breakthrough, the end result is the end result of a long little thing that continues over time, and the most shocking news: Your ship doesn't come -- it's here, docks and waits, you have money, you already have time, you already have the skills and confidence. Small things that seem irrelevant at work, but when they multiply over time, they produce very excellent results. You can call these things a little virtue or a habit of success.
