The Dragon Priest Shrine Legend claims that the highest ranking Dragon Priests were given magical masks - strange artifacts that defy the laws of time, and give their wearers powerful enchantments. -Loading Screens [src] A Dragon Priest Mask is a unique piece of headgear and can be achieved after defeating each of the nine unique dragon priests that appear at different locations throughout Skyrim. Each mask is unique in color and varies in crafting material. Each mask is named after their respective masts and has unique effects; they are defined as either light or heavy armour. All dragon priest masks require Arcane Blacksmith perk to upgrade. Since most of the priests are found near word walls, they can be easily localized by talking to Arngeir, in High Hrotgrah, about finding words of power and receiving quests to discover most word walls. The shrine can be found in the central barrow of Labyrinthian. Here lies a wooden mask that sends the wearer back to a time before the destruction of the Bromjunaar Sanctuary. The central focus of the shrine is the dragon priest shrine. When the eight masks are placed in each respective castle at the shrine, the final mask, Konahrik, is revealed. The other masks can be taken from the shrine once Konahrik is obtained. Enchantment: When health is low, have a chance to heal the wearer and harm nearby enemies. Class: Heavy Armor or Light Armor Trivia According to character artist Jonah Lobe in an AMA thread, the decision to provide masks to Dragon Priests was inspired by Vivec's Ashmask in The Elder Scrolls III: Morrowind. [source?] In the aforementioned thread, Lobe also states that the design of masks itself was inspired by a Nigerian mask gifted by a family friend. [source?] Each mask appears to be made of a different metallic or stone material. This is supported by the fact that mesh and texture files are mentioned by material rather than as the dragon priest it belongs to. Hevnoaraak is iron Krosis is bronze Morokei is moonstone Nahkriin is ebony Otar is marble Rahgot is orichalcum (referred to as orichalum) Vokun is steel Volsung is korund (referred to as corondrum) In addition to the dragon masks priest has powerful enchantments, it should also be noted that certain masks have the highest armor rating of any headgear available. For light armor, Krosis and Volsung have the highest base armor. For heavy armor, Konahrik has the highest base armor. But with Dragonborn DLC, miraak's mask has the highest tongue and light By retrieving a mask placed at the shrine, all forging enhancements will be removed from the mask.
