Tarkov weapon modding explained

When you have played a few dozen hours of Tarkov escape, one thing becomes easily clear: nothing about this game ever comes simply. The nitty-gritty of armor, for example, can easily take hours of learning and would probably still have more to study afterwards. The same goes for the gun learning curve where you have gun results to choose from, and even more types of ammunition. But there is another game concept that requires some patience and understanding: Escape tarkov's modding weapon. Why the modding of weapons in Escape from Tarkov matters Not all weapons in the EFT are the same. Examine your weapon in the game and you will see that it has several statistics, all of which provide an overview of the utility, efficiency and general use of your weapon. Let's provide some insight into the statistics below: Accuracy – Pretty self-explanatory. It's a statistic that defines how closely he hit his shots wherever he targets it. Ergonomics - With the case of ergonomics, it is mainly about the handling of firearms. Higher values in this statistic mean that you can do all the gun-related things you can do faster. Pointing to the sights (ADS), recharging, and even switching to your other weapon are covered. Muzzle Speed – This statistic goes hand in hand accurately. It influences how quickly you hit your shots as well as how accurate they are. Sighting range - For this one, what it covers is how far you can expand your vision when ADS-ing.Recoil - And finally, backspace is about the path and the bounce of your weapon every time you shoot with it. The lower recoil you have in your gun, the more accurate it is in a general sense. Mods influence and change these statistics so that you can do better your gun, whether it's with aiming and shooting or just general handling and convenience. Different types of mods influence one or more of these statistics. Take fists, for example, that reduce the values of the recoil and improve ergonomics. Stocks do almost the same. The views, as the name suggests, affect both the precision and the sighting range. There may also be drawbacks depending on the mods you use. For stealth players, suppressors are useful, as these reduce the noise generated by your shots. The cost of this, however, is lower muzzle speed. Essentially, what's important here is that you find your ideal combination of mods that suit your playing style and make your weapons more deadly. Doing so will help you survive for longer and get much better long-term loot. Quick guide to mod types and their uses In general, there are three types of equipment for modding weapons in EFT. You vital parts, functional mods, and gear mods. Each of these types has its own set of additional subcategories, which include, for example, muzzle devices and views for functional mods. If you would look at all the EFT weapon mods in a list, you can understandably get pretty pretty Let's start with the most important parts: vital. The name says it all, since some weapons can't work without these crucial mods. Barrels, bodyguards, receivers and slides, gas pipe blocks and gun cuffs fall under vital parts. These are more essential and tend not to have much to do with weapons statistics. Next, we have functional mods, which usually make your weapon more useful. An example would be flashlights that provide additional visibility when reproduced in darker areas. You can also get laser target pointers for better accuracy or muzzle devices to speed up your shots. Foregrips and sights also fall under this category. More typically, functional mods influence ergonomics and accuracy. Those not mentioned fall under the gear mods. These are more varied in what they can do, and you'll need to read closely what each mod does for their weapon. Mounts are a popular gear mod that allow you to add in other mods to your weapon. Select weapons such as snipers, assault rifles (ARs), and machine guns may need a mount so they can hold a view mod. Stocks and chassis, load handles, magazines and grenade launchers are all gear mods. Where and how can you get weapons mods? Two ways: trades or raids. Trade is perhaps the easiest way to handle all your EFT weapons modding needs. Level up your shopkeepers like Peacekeeper and Skier to some extent and they'll sell you mods. You can also look at the flea market for available mods you can purchase. Be financially prepared, though. Most cost a fair amount of roubles if you're aiming for a fully equipped gun. Raids are also a decent way to get mods, although you don't really have an opinion of which exact mod you'll get per run. Gun boxes in particular have a higher chance of having mods, but as you probably know, you'll need to be quick on your fingers or blessed by RNG for it. Or, booty mods of dead players. This also works. General tips on escaping the tarkov modding weapon is worth investigating in advance any mods you are interested in buying. Modding isn't always cheap, so I'd better come prepared. For compatibility, you can examine eft elements and check which ones might or may not work. There is a pop-up window with the Compatible line Available. Move the cursor to the arrow next to it and it will show which weapons can make use of the mod. Note that some mods may affect certain statistics negatively in exchange for a specific advantage or function. Keep this in mind and decide if it's worth the commitment to pick up this particular mod. If you are a little In what is built you can try, check out the most expensive weapon constructions on offer in the flea market. You can examine these weapons and see which mods you have fitted and use that as your starting point. Some websites also allow you to do modded weapon simulations. It might be worth taking a look at those in a slightly clearer direction. Final note In a final note, there is nothing very clear about the modding of weapons. Feel free to explore on your own and find the settings that feel good for you. Balance all the factors accordingly and you will do well with your weapon of choice.
