Search and search for sexual offenders:In general, convicted sex offenders are required to enter his name and vital information in the database of sexual offenders of the state in which he currently lives. The federal government then compiles all information from each state and publishes a national database of sexual offenders a security resource that the public can use. Sex offenders are individuals who have been found guilty of committing or attempting to commit a sex crime. Sex crimes are generally defined as criminal acts of a sexual nature such as sexual violence, child molestation, sex trafficking, and rape. If you want to look for sex offenders in Cuyahoga County, you can visit their eSORN website here. Before you start searching, be sure to read the disclaimer. The state of Ohio cannot guarantee the accuracy and completeness of the information sent to the database. Some of the search results may trigger previous addresses of sexual offenders rather than current ones. Or, you can get general addresses like the block where the house is located but not the exact address. Bail and Bondsman Bail is the money or property that is promised to the court in exchange for the temporary release of a suspect who has been charged with a crime while a wait for the trial to begin. If the accused does not appear before the court on the day of his trial, the money or property is lost. In Cuyahoga County, the defendant can use the services of a bondholder if he lacks the money to post bail. The bondholder will charge a fee, usually no more than 10% of the amount set by the judge. The fee, however, cannot be reimbursed to the accused even if the case brought against him is dropped.
