Inspiration is good at the root of creative writing, however sometimes you simply need to start writing and see where you take it. At the most basic level, a hero's story, a setting, will have a time during which stories take place, and a conflict or situation. Make 10 sheets of paper and make them 1 to 10. Pick a number. The number you select will match the character list number below. Turn the number back and I've seen a random number. Do this for all four categories and write a short story with the length of your choice. Don't be afraid to add more characters around your hero, or you can move your hero to another place after a while. Just make sure all four sections are covered in part of your story (they don't have to appear exactly how you read them on the list). Some combinations may turn out odd, but go with the flow. Remember these characters exist in your imagination and so anything is possible!
