How cool would it be to hear the Mickey Mouse song while waiting for your toast to appear? They have Cinderella and Pooh and Tigger too. They have toasted pictures in the bread too. I think I found MIL's gift, and my Yankee gift against our family Christmas party. I look through the swiss colony catalog. These things are unreal! How cool would it be to hear the Mickey Mouse song while waiting for your toast to appear? They have Cinderella and Pooh and Tigger too. They have toasted pictures in the bread too. I think I found MIL's gift, and my Yankee gift against our family Christmas party. I have the Mickey Mouse toaster playing Its A Small World and I love it. My imprint on the bread is Mickey Mouse. I bought one about 3 years ago and I quickly returned it because even though it was cute to play music, no matter what I did, it wasn't grilling evenly on both sides. I was pretty disappointed. Maybe they have improved them since then. My DM has one and they are cute, but the kids will think they are cute and will want to play the song, and nothing is cute before the coffee, not even the toaster. Just a warning. Mine stopped playing music after only 3 weeks. I gave one to my sister as a gift. He also stopped playing music after only Uses. Ours is still moving happily more than a year later. It's going well. Ours is the MM Club March version. Mine sometimes plays a distorted version of its air, but I love it. Be careful though: it scares the of my cats - even after more than a year. If you have animals, they probably won't like it. It is said that the Cinderella one on The Waltz of Flowers - I can't think of where this song came from and what it would look like... Can anyone help? When reading a review someone suggested pressing a cookie cutter into a slice of bread - not enough to cut it - just enough to make a print and then grill it - which looks cute - I'll try it. But am I also seriously consider buying a toaster - now that the Cinderella or Mickey Mouse? We have the Mickey Mouse one and have the same problems as others have posted. It does not toast evenly. My kids love music. We received one last Christmas to get into the Disney atmosphere for our December 2005 trip. It worked well until last month when the toast wouldn't stay down and the music played warbly. Is that a word? It was so great to hear him play Mickey Mouse Club every morning. With four kids, I make a lot of toast. Maybe they didn't love mum singing and dancing around the kitchen to toaster music as much as I did and he dropped it without telling me. I really miss it. It's just not the same using the toaster oven. We've had the Winnie the Pooh for about 2 years now. It's going well. My 2-year-old son particularly likes it. When he hears the music, he says toe! It's so cute! I want one! Been hinting at dh I want one for Christmas! I looked at them. They're really cute, but I'd sure would be more than disappointed if the music stopped playing after paying $50 for a toaster. I have a toaster oven that was less than that and made more than toast. I had a Mickey for about 3 years. It's still going strong, playing It's a Small World, but it's not the best toaster ever made. It's good for normal sized bread slices, but try sticking a Jemima Aunt waffle in there, and you'll shake this thing upside down to get it out. I think the problem is actually the cute Mickey who prints your toast. The waffle gets caught on and it is very difficult to recover. My mother gave the cub to DD last year. Winnie the Pooh at an unholy morning time is no fun and I can't figure out how to turn off the music! The bee also lost its wings within a few weeks. We had an entrepreneur stop when I was making toast for the DD one morning... at least he thought it was funny! I was given the Mickey Mouse one bought from Disney World. He played at the Mickey Mouse Club for about 3 weeks, then resigned. Mickey's footprint has never been great either and he doesn't even drink. My mother paid $60 for it, a real disappointment for the money! Mr. A friend gave it to me last year for Christmas. Mine plays the march of club MM and it is always strong. It doesn't toast the most evenly, but I really like it and the DH too. My mom has one playing the Mickey Mouse March song. Now while a great novelty ... I don't think it's a great long-term toaster. It was great the first times on the tours. Now -- I've just even the trouble. My daughters are doing well. I've got two, actually. Both are Mickey's playing at MM Club March. The first one stopped playing after only a few uses, I called the phone on the paper that was in the box, and they said they would send me another one. Well, before I could even do this, my BiL gave me another one for Christmas! We've had this one almost a year and it's still going strong. You, who had one, maybe you should call the manufacturer and try to send them back. The lady I spoke to was great. Page 2 Thread starter Disney1fan2002 Start date November 6, 2005 2005
