The first part of simple combing the development of scripture in the last two thousand years, the Western Latin alphabet has evolved in a series of social and technological upheavals, laying the foundations for the creation of modern English fonts. The oldest alphabets appeared in the Phoeic in 1200 p.f.nl (the ancient Phoeicians were roughly equivalent to today's Lebanon), and the Greeks modified them in the 8th century, drawing from them through the Etrussians (the ancient city-state of central Italy) and the Romans, and all western fonts have since been developed from Roman scriptures. Here are six main introductions: Roman and late Roman scriptures, island and ethnic scriptures, Gallolin and early Gothic scriptures, Gothic scriptures, Italian and humanistic scriptures, post-Renaissance scriptures. The most significant event in the history of western scriptures was the Roman duels with the alphabet of Etruscan. In the 1st century BC, the Romans developed a series of fonts, one of which was a quick-typing cursor, written on wax plates or a written belt on a piece of paper (made of stems of paper sand in the Nile Delta, one of the oldest writing tools in the world), that had a major impact on the development of lowercase letters, including semi-Ansel writing. Another important font is the main font of the country, which is used for manuscripts, written agreements, carvings, etc. Vatican Basilica: Since the end of the 5th century, the Vatican, represented by a semi-Ansel body. Imperial capitals V 1. Two thousand years later, this font became the basis of modern capital letters. Latin Alphabet: This inscription, from the bottom of the Tulatin monument, is one of the best preserved specimens of imperial capitals. Amiatinus: The oldest well-maintained manuscript of the Latin Bible, written by about 690 to 700 AD island and national scripts: After the fall of island and national scripts in the 5th century, various fonts developed in their remaining empires, and capitalized island entities used in Irish manuscripts evolved from Ansel and semi-Ansels. In other parts of Europe, including Spain's Vigo and Merov Christian churches, inter-country exchanges have played an important role in making cultural exchanges more inactive. Irish monks not only became the center of monasteries in Scotland and northern England, but also established many monasteries in Lucerne, Colby, Bobbio, Italy and other places in France. Kelso's evangelical book Kells: From the End of the 8th Century, it was the first time that a man had been in a coma since the end of the 1980s. In the 9th century, his kingdom of Frank stretched from the Pyrenees to the Baltic Sea, and the manuscript invented by the theologian Alquin became the official font of the empire - now known as Galolin lesser. Outside the Kingdom of Frank, national scriptures were still used at the time. In Italy, the Benevento font is one of the longest-living Roman scriptures. In England, the bodies of the islands and anglo-Saxon lowercase letters were used until the 10th century. As it continues to evolve, Galolin's small form becomes more and more flat and moves toward a thin form that has some similarities to the Gothic body, a flat font known as post-Gallolin or early Gothic. A modern version of the Gallorin subcosm, written by fontologist Sheila Waters in 1990, was systematically developed in Europe at the end of the 12th century. The two most important formal organs are Textura Quadrata and her twin brother Prescisus. The texture of quadrata above and Prescisus below, the difference is that the Prescisus foot parts are flat. Mixed fonts Barstard Scripts Various Gothic cursures were called mixed fonts until the 18th century, when the official Gothic printing was replaced with copper 200 years after its demise. Mixed fonts are difficult to classify, from different countries, cities to different occupations are different, but in general, the differences between British style, French style, German style is easy to distinguish. In mixed fonts, the case of the same glyphs begins to appear together, while Gothic fonts are used at the beginning of new sentences. Italian fonts and humanist fonts (Italian and humanist scripts) In 1400, an improved version of Galolin's small font became an official font that was in tinged with the Renaissance and was called humanistic writing. Its printing-friendly features eventually made it one of the most distinctive fonts in Europe and have been used to this day. The Italian body has been edwin to the present day after a series of changes, in 1420 it was born as a manuscript and in 1500 it was used for printing. The work of 16th-century Italian scholars has been the work of Italian scholars. This font, with its beautiful ring and proportions, is faster for engraving than for writing, and in the 19th century it was the first of its type. Universal Penman: A book for teaching the scriptures that sums up the elegant 18th-century manuscript of the 18th century. This passage is the closest copper version of Modern Calligraphy, a modern English calligraphic renaissance that began in the early 20th century. Starting in 1950, not only in Latin countries, but also in countries that are not Latin countries, calligraphy in different cultures continues to spread its own interest, in the last 20 years, a form of scripture of constant exploration and redefinition, which makes it an increasingly artistic form. Koch's work, a revival of modern English calligraphy, began in the early 20th century. Starting in 1950, not only in Latin countries, but also in countries that are not Latin countries, calligraphy in different cultures continues to spread its own interest, in the last 20 years, a form of scripture of constant exploration and redefinition, which makes it an increasingly artistic form.
