An anabatic wind, from the Greek anabatos, verbally of anabaïne in meaning moving up, is a warm wind that blows up a steep slope or mountain side, driven by heating the slope through insolation. It is also known as an uplope stream. These winds usually occur during the day in calm sunny weather. These gentle upslope winds are known as anabatic winds. very low temperatures can be formed because the continuous renewal of cold air in the pondWhen air over oblique terrain is cooled by conduction it becomes closer than near free air and drains to lower levels (Figure 7.17). The winds are Anabatic winds. Anabatic wind, also called upslope wind, local airflow that blows up a hill or mountainside to the sun. During the day, the sun warms such a slope (and the air over it) faster than the adjacent atmosphere over a valley or a plain Height. 20 Feb 2012 The mechanism of anabatic wind can be described as follows. The warm surface heats a vertical column of the atmosphere from the Katabatic winds developing at night when clear skies, a general backlash begins down due to gravity that the katabatic winds (in anabatic winds occur in the Alps in the summer months when there are generally a 28 Jan Anabatic Winds are upslope winds driven by warmer surface temperatures on a mountainside than the surrounding air column. Katabatic winds are downslope winds created when the mountain surface is colder than the surrounding air and creates a down slope wind.
