Words that start with s to describe someone negatively

Picture: Lumina Images/Blend Images/Getty Images They say beauty is in the eye of the viewer, but they have never described the many types of beauty. This is because the concept is constantly evolving and deeply personal. Fortunately, there is no one-size-fits-all version of it. Everyone fits into one or more of the groups, but the outcome may vary depending on the person making the judgment. There are also people who base beauty on their natural looks and others who think beauty involves embracing the latest makeup and style trends. When you add inner beauty to the mixture, things become even more complicated. Maybe you are more of a natural beauty that rolls out of bed glowing and ready to take on the day. Maybe you're more of a classic beauty who has a timeless allure. Then again, your beauty can be mysterious and difficult to pin down. Do you know which word best describes your personal beauty? Copyright © 2020 InfoSpace Holdings, LLC, a System1 Company Preparation is key when an interviewer asks: What is the one word you want to use to describe yourself? The question is almost as hard to answer as the dreaded interviewee: Tell me about yourself. But you don't want to give a two- or three-word answer, for fear that you interviewer and and it on yourself to decide how you want to answer the question. The word you use may depend on the type of job you're interviewing for, what others say about you or where you see yourself on your career track. Use a word that matches the most important qualification for the job. For example, if you apply for a hotel household position, consider using a word such as conscientious, attentive, or effective. These are characteristics that will serve you well in a position where the company's expectation is that employees will follow strict procedures for tasks such as cleaning, hotel guest service and managing how much time they spend on multiple projects each day. Think of words that your colleagues use to describe you. Using a word based on the opinion of others can carry more weight than trying to conjure up a word that can make you come off as a braggart or immodest. When the interviewer asks for that one word, you can say: My colleagues usually tell me that I'm at the most trusted member of our team, because I can count on pulling my weight and a little when we have a team assignment. In this case, it is appropriate to elaborate on the reason for choosing that word. Use a word to help you get that campaign if you're interviewing for a job with your current employer. Words like tenacious, dedicated or loyal describe characteristics that will benefit you in the long run, especially if you are interviewing for a job at the same company. Words like these reinforce your commitment to the company and remind the hiring manager why promoting an internal candidate can benefit your organization more than making a job offer to an external candidate. Take an overview of the attributes with which you are most proud and foreword one word answer with, In danger of being immodest, I consider myself Continue the answer to the interviewer's question with a word or term such as detail-oriented or collaborative. These are the types of words that suggest what you bring to the company - avoid choosing words that aren't really immodest. An answer that: At the risk of being immodest, I consider myself a perfect employee, is off-putting because it probably isn't true because employees - no matter how hard you work - aren't perfect. Not long ago, Comstock, 46, ran marketing at General Electric; We have her to thank for ecomagination. She moved to GE's NBC Universal unit 18 months ago, and just got a new gig that combines ad sales and digital media across the TV network, cable channels and movie studio. Want to stream Heroes, read the interactive novel, and then bid online for artwork from the show? Thank you Comstock for all that too. The tv economy used to be simple. Do you understand how to make money today, when I can see 30 Rock pretty much at any time? We it much better than we used to. Digital media allows us to open up new windows without the cannibalization you can expect. So yes, we can offer 30 Rock in preview, then on air, then streaming, then iTunes, then mobile, and then syndication. We've modelled. Looks like we're making more money. How do advertisers count on this new world? Some know what they want, some less so. But now all marketers do digitally, not because it's trendy, but because they have to. Purchasing groups have created devices called vision, sound, and movement [to work across media]. They expect us to zero in on targeted consumers: What do we know about them, and how do we reach them? How do viewing habits change? We've had 60 million streams [of TV shows] on NBC.com. Many of these are repeat viewers. Others are time-shifting. They also change location change with iTunes or on phones. And does it work for you? It has to. If consumers are in control, they will figure out how they will look. We have to find the right solution. What's the next new one? More personal expression [of viewers], the desire to be involved in the story. Text to vote on a reality show, or see heroes and call a phone number. That things are so rudimentary; We look back one day and say: We were so cute then! All this involves great cultural change. How is NBC Universal coping? This room is frenetic and chaotic, and we are constantly trying to get out of our own way. With success, you become a little more confident. But we still need to be more focused and more disciplined. Are you still, as you once said about yourself, impatient? Yes. And I'm afraid. I constantly scan the landscape. What's the next new one? Who gets there first? This business is hypersensitive like that. You have to choose a path, stick to it, and feel good about it. Second-guesses will end up with more than wounds. Ulcers.
