I have no idea why we have a full 6 extra months for year 2. Absolute waste of time. You can cut the course to 4+1 years. There is no first aid training, basic surgical skills, critical care scenarios before joining practices, they only ask for a BLS at the end of practices. Not really sure how BLS will help after finishing entire practices. Too much emphasis on non-clinical gross anatomy rather than practices. No wonder the kids in the year 1 MBBS fear anatomy like a monster. The pattern of the exam is too subjective. Have a good handwriting and draw few random cartoons, get good marks. RIP logic. You realize that all your 4-and-a-half year medical training is absolute rubbish once you start working in the hospital as an intern when you don't even know ABC for a trauma patient. Too much emphasis on how to describe a dent in surgery rather than discussing the meaningful picture and operational plan. Futile discussions about whether the power of a limb was 2/5 or 3/5 instead of arguing about how to optimize a stroke patient and deal with his rehabilitation. People are only worried about all the abnormalities of a gallbladder, but have no idea how to position a patient for vault cholecystectomy. There are no freakin guidelines on when to use or antibiotics that lead to a complete waste of resources and antibiotic resistance. Pharma talks at length about the difference mechanisms of drugs, but you end up with no clue as to what inotrope to use during sepsis. A few elective publications such as radio, dermat shoo away medical students, effectively limiting imagination. I've heard people say, You don't know anything, why are you coming? I was like I thought we're supposed to learn things here. Too much focus on teaching all causes of pancreatitis, but having no idea how to hold a difficult conversation with a patient's relative. Deny the importance of image like CT and MRI and emphasis on simple X-rays as you are too junior for these things. But right at the start of practices, you're supposed to know when to order a TAC for head injury. What???? Practical exams are another big joke. All you need to do is get the long right to discuss cases and you have a horrible initial discussion and will scare your performance for the day. No second chance? Teachers who suggest old-fashioned and irrelevant books like Hutchinson that are absolutely no use in today's times. The oldest edition was good perhaps. Emphasis on obsolete clinical examination techniques. No one really does all the luxury varicose vein tests now, as there was little evidence to support their use in routine practice. In addition, we are completely oblivious to using bedside doppler, which is a much more useful tool. Guy learns and exits the chest anatomy in year 1 MBBS, but doesn't know how to place a drain on his chest in a safe triangle. Beautiful subjects such as forensic med are reduced to clown teaching them in closed classrooms with old PPTs and no image that can be mind-numbing rather than involving pupils in a post mortem session or displaying practical applications. Precious time is wasting reading satyanarayan biochemist how reading lippincott doesn't help you through exam questions, while the other book puts you through basic foundations of clinical significance. The same story with Cunningham and Guyton, I really don't know why the faculty was great at these, but I found it completely useless for any purpose. I could go on, but I made peace with the fact that the system in its current form cannot be changed. You just let go of it and build yourself the way you want. I keep hearing news of changes to the curriculum and other related BS, but practicality is much less and I don't think that will change anytime before. The simple answer is: Don't break any applicable laws while doing so and you will be good to go! Federal law requires you to be at least 21 years old to buy a gun from a federal firearms license holding dealer, but in most states you will need to be 21 or older to legally own a gun no matter where Purchase. Therefore, the figure age 21 or more, and you will be safe. Federal law prohibits certain people from possessing firearms or ammunition. The principal is convicted felons, but there are several other similar classes of people, the youngest of whom is anyone who has been offence of assault or domestic abuse. Most state laws follow federal law in this regard. In some states, you must have a permit to purchase a gun. Get it. It's no big deal. It's not a permit to carry, just to purchase. You should have if you buy a gun from an individual or even if you accept it as a gift if it is from anyone other than immediate family members, such as their parents. After that, buy your Glock. Buying through an FFL dealer is your best bet, but there's usually nothing wrong with buying from an individual if you get it right. Preferably someone you already know at least some and have no reason to believe is selling in bad faith. In other words, your best judgment indicates that it is probably not stolen or has been used to commit a crime with. If you're getting on the case with accessories priced at about the market and the individual doesn't seem to be in a particularly big rush to sell it, it's probably fine. If you're selling it very cheaply and acts like you want to go yesterday, that's not a good sign and buy from it once you've observed that you could potentially expose yourself to guilt by buying a stolen gun if the authorities come to believe that you must have known that the deal wasn't legitimate. Once you buy it, to be fully legal, I would legally recommend bringing it home with you. A locking toolbox or a small suitcase, even a well-secured cardboard box with tape should be fine. The key is that it is not easily accessible and too big to hide your person. Put it in the trunk or somewhere you can't get there while driving. Once you are on your own property, you can usually carry or hide it in any way you want without any problems. Not at all. You do not have to fill in the percentage of any topic on the form. Just scan the dialing sheet. (Either 10th or 12th). As CLAT forms are filled out online. NOOOOOOO. You're talking to a military romantic scammer. I received an email from the U.S. Military directly responding to your question being pasted below please read on. I think you are the victim of a military romantic scam while the person you are talking to is a foreign national posing as an American soldier who claims to be stationed abroad on a peacekeeping mission. This is the key to the scam that always claim to be on a peacekeeping mission. Part of their scam is saying they don't have access to their money that their mission is highly dangerous. If your girlfriend/ future husband/wife is asking you to do the following or have exhibited this behavior, it's a more likely scam: It moves to the immediately after meeting him on Facebook or SnapChat or Instagram or some dating site or social networks. Many times they delete the place where you met them right after they ask you to move to a more private messaging siteProfesses love to you very very And he seems to cite poems and lyrics along with using his own kind of broken language as they profess their love and devotion guickly. They also showed concern about his health and love for his family. He promises marriage as soon as he reaches the state on leave that he was asked to pay. They request money (bank transfers) and Amazon, iTune, Verizon, etc. gift cards, for medicine, religious practices, and goes out to return home, internet access, full work tasks, help a sick friend, get him out of trouble, or anything that sounds fishy. The military provides all the soldier's needs, including medical food care and transportation for sick leave. Trust me, I've lived it, you're probably being scammed. I'm just trying to show examples that are more likely to be confused. Below is an email response I received after sending an investigation to the U.S. government when I discovered I was scammed. I received this wonderful response again with lots of useful links on how to find and inform your scammer. And how to learn more about Romance Scams. Right now you can also copy the image search and look forward to seeing the images of the real person you are impersonating. this doesn't always work and take some digging. if you find the real person, you can send them messages and alert them that their image is being used to scam them. Good luck to you and sorry this may be happening to you. please continue reading the government response you received below is very informative. You have contacted an email that is overseen by the U.S. Army Criminal Investigation Command. Unfortunately, this is a common concern. We assure you that there is never any reason to send money to anyone claiming to be a soldier online. If you've only spoken to that person online, chances are you aren't a U.S. soldier at all. I tried to be very open while filling out the preference form: I choose many products like my favorite products and said I'm open about the team I want to join. I was even very open to the location and start date to get matching interviews from the host (I negotiated the start date in the interview until both me and my host were happy.) You could ask your recruiter to review your form (there is very cool and could help a lot since you have a greater experience). Search the potential team. Before the interviews, try to find the smart guestion that you are going to ask the potential host (do a team search to find nice and deep questions to impress your host). Prepare your resume well. It is very likely that you will not get algorithm questions/data structure as in the first round. It will be just a friendly chat if you're lucky. If your potential team is working on something like machine learning, expect to be asked questions about machine learning, courses related to machine learning you have and relevant experience (projects, internships). Of course you have to study that before the interview. Take as long as you need if you feel It takes some time to prepare for the host's match (it's less than the technical interview), but it's worth it, of course. Course. Course.
