Poor communication will lead to distrust of the project and its leadership, and ultimately make it impossible to fulfill all the goals and objectives of the project. What is communication? Communication in life is the pinnacle of any successful - and not so - successful relationship. According to Webster's dictionary, communication is defined as the process of transferring information from one person to another. Communication processes are programmed by signal interaction between at least two agents who share repertoire of signs and sign rules. Communication is usually defined as instilling or sharing views, thoughts or information about language, writing or signs. Although there is one-step communication, communication may be better perceived as a two-strong process in which the exchange and progression of thoughts, feelings and ideas (energy) to mutually acceptable goals or direction (information) Why is communication important? Often we have a message that we want to communicate or want the recipient of the message to understand our message just as we will go through. Effective communication Effective communication helps organizations maintain good relationships with customers and employees; Sending information effectively helps avoid any disputes that may arise from misunderstandings. Ineffective communication usually crashes because it does not trigger the desired response in the form of feedback from the receiver. This is a shame for many commercial organizations. Many managers communicate, but often not very effective. Lack of capacity for effective communication of managers is the cause of the failure of many companies. Any company or business organization needs an effective communication network to function properly and achieve its goals. The ultimate goal of any form of communication – face-to-face meetings, telephone discourse, teleconferences, video conferencing, interviews, e-mails, letters or memos – is to receive the expected response in the form of feedback from the recipient to the sender. This is what is effective communication. This is necessary in order for the information to be well connected and to communicate correctly so that the recipient understands the message and responds positively. In other words, effective communication is one that achieves the results for which it is intended. Download the PNG Image Transparent Gallery link.
