The U.S. afterpay company showed the second fastest growth rate among all of its regions in the quarter, with underlying sales there more than tripling to A$1.6 billion ($1.14 billion) from a year earlier. The results highlight the United States as the sector's biggest prize, but Afterpay now faces fierce competition there from the likes of Sweden's Klarna and more established financial companies such as PayPal Holdings.Arguably Australia's hottest stock this year, Afterpay now has 11.2 million active customers as of the end of September, 1.3 million more than three months ago. Afterpay's shares climbed 8.2% to $A103.8 by midday, while the broader market slipped. The COVID-19 pandemic has accelerated the shift to online shopping and has deepened the appeal of alternative credit companies, which offer small interest-free installment loans to buyers. While some analysts said the U.S. numbers were a slight miss, Citigroup and UBS said Afterpay's underlying sales were tracking ahead of their first-half forecast as the December quarter tended to favor higher spending. Afterpay said that so far in October it was averaging about 15,000 new customers a day, compared with 12,500 a day during the quarter. Total underlying sales for the quarter ended September 30 totaled A$4.1 billion, compared to A$1.9 billion in the prior corresponding period. The company added that its global expansion plans in parts of continental Europe and Asia were progressing well. Afterpay laid out plans last week to diversify its product options in Australia by offering savings accounts through Westpac Banking Corp alongside budget tools and other services that analysts believe could be approved globally. (Reporting by Anushka Trivedi and Nikhil Kurian Nainan in Bengaluru; Editing by Maju Samuel and Stephen Coates)President-elect Joe Biden a $1.9 trillion rescue plan Thursday calls for three key tax improvements for 2021 that will help Americans across the income spectrum. Tech stocks could come under pressure as President-elect Joe Biden's stimulus plan works its way through the U.S. economy. Business Investor's DailyThe Dow Jones slid lower amid fears Joe Biden's massive stimulus plan could lead to higher interest rates or tax hikes. GM's stock reversed. Watching the markets with an eye on the main opportunity, Raymond James strategist Tavis McCourt sees both risk and opportunity in the current Conditions. The opportunity, in his view, stems from the obvious factors: Democrats won both Georgia Senate seats in the recent runoff vote, giving the Biden administration's incoming majority support to both Houses of Congress - and increasing the chances of substantial budget support being signed into law in the near future. Most importantly, the coronavirus vaccination program is progressing, and reports suggest that Pfizer's vaccine, one of two approved in the U.S., is effective against the new strain of the virus. A successful vaccination program would accelerate economic recovery, allowing states to relax lockout regulations - and get people back to work. The risks also come from the political sector and public health. House Republicans have passed articles of impeachment against President Trump, despite the impending physical shutdown of his term, and this quote reduces the chances of political reconciliation in a heavily polarized environment. And while the COVID strain is combined with today's vaccines, there is still a risk that a new strain will develop that is not covered by existing vaccinations – which could restart the cycle of locksmiths and economic decline. Another risk mccourt sees, beyond these two, would be a sharp rise in inflation. He doesn't discount that, but he thinks it's unlikely to happen anytime soon. ... product/service inflation is only really a possibility after re-openings, so the market feels a little bulletproof in the very near future, and so the ongoing rally, with Dems winning the GA races simply adding fuel to the stimulus fire, McCourt noted. Some of McCourt's colleagues among executive analyst Raymond James keep these risks in mind, and putting their imprimatur into strong dividend shares. We searched Raymond James' recent calls, and using the TipRanks database, we selected two shares with high-yield dividends. These buy-rated tickers carry a dividend yield of 7%, a strong attraction for investors interested in using the current good times to create a defensive firewall should the risks materialize. Enterprise Products Partners (EPD) We will start in the energy sector, a business sector long known for both high cash flow and high dividends. Enterprise Products Partners is a medium-power company, part of the network that transports hydrocarbon products from wells to storage farms, refineries, and distribution points. The company controls over 50,000 miles worth of pipelines, shipping terminals on the Texas Gulf Coast, and storage facilities for 160 million barrel oil and 14 billion cubic feet of natural gas. The company was hurt by low prices and low demand in 1H20, but partially recovered in the second half. Revenue changed, rising 27% sequentially to reach $6.9 billion in the third quarter. That number was down year-on-year, slipping 5.4%, but came in at more than 6% 6% forecast for the third quarter. Third-quarter earnings, at 48 cents per share, were slightly below forecasts, but rose 4% year-on-year and 2% sequentially. EPD recently declared a dividend distribution of 4Q20, at 45 cents per common share. This is on top of the previous payment of 44 cents, and marks the first increase in two years. At $1.80 annually, the payment pays 7.9%. Among the bulls is Raymond James' Justin Jenkins, who rates EPD a strong market. The analyst gives the stock a price target of $26, suggesting a 15% rise from current levels. (To watch Jenkins' track record, click here) Supporting his bullish stance, Jenkins noted, in our view, EPD's unique combination of integration, balance sheet strength, and ROIC history remains best in the category. We see EPD as arguably better placed to withstand the volatile landscape... With EPD's footprint, demand gains, project development, and conventional ramps should more than offset the opposite supply winds and lower marketing results y/y... It's not often that analysts all agree on a stock, so when it happens, take note. Buy EPD's strong consensus rating is based on a unanimous 9 Buys. The average price target of $24.63 a share suggests a 9% rise from the current share price of $22.65. (See EPD stock analysis at TipRanks) AT&T, Inc. (T) AT&T is one of the market's most recognizable stocks. The company is a member of the S&P 500, and has a reputation as one of the best dividend payers on the stock market. AT&T is a real giant of the large-cap industry, with a market cap of $208 billion and the largest network of mobile and fixed telephony services in the US. The acquisition of TimeWarner (now WarnerMedia), in a process that will operate between 2016 and 2018, has given the company a large stake in the mobile content streaming business. AT&T saw revenue and profits fall in 2020, under pressure from the corona pandemic -- but the decline was modest, as the same pandemic also put a premium on telecommunications and networking systems, which tended to support AT&T's businesses. Revenue in 3Q20 was $42.3 billion, 5% below the previous quarter. In positive notes, free cash flow increased yoy from $11.4 billion to $12.1 billion, and the company reported a net profit of 5.5 million new subscribers. The increase in subscribers is due to the new development of a 5G network – and premium content services. The company has held up its reputation as a dividend champion, and has made the most recent dividend for payment in February 2021. The payout, at 52 per common share, is the fifth in a row at current levels and year-on-year at $2.08, yielding 7.2%. For comparison, the average dividend between technology companies is only 0.9%. AT&T has kept its dividend strong over the past 12 years. Raymond James analyst Frank Luthan sees AT&T as a classic defensive value stock, and describes the current state of T as one with evil [We believe] there's more that can go right over the next 12 months than may get worse for AT&T. Throw in the fact that stocks are heavily short-circuited, and we think this is a recipe for upside. Big cap value names are hard to find, and we believe investors who can wait a few months for an average return locking in a 7% return should be rewarded for buying AT&T at current levels, Luthan opined. According to these comments, Luthan rates T outerform (i.e. Buy), and his $32 price target implies room for a 10% increase from current levels. (To follow Luthan's history, click here) Looking at consensus analysis, opinions from other analysts are more scattered. 7 Buy Reviews, 6 Holds and 2 Sells add up to a moderate Market consensus. In addition, the average price target of $31.54 shows ~9% upside potential. Investor's Business DailySome shares that are left for dead are now billion-dollar companies, thanks to a rally in the S&P 500 and other indexes. This daughter writes: 'My conscience gets the best out of me, and I'd be transparent about being the co-owner of this savings account.'Q.: To reduce the death toll on my estate, if I put my Roth IRA in an irrevocable trust now and after my husband and I die four years later, make my children later have six years or 10 years to invest all the money before they have to dispose Roth money from the trust under the new rules of the SECURE Act 2019? A:John, you can't put a Roth IRA in a trust while you're alive. You can move the assets to the Roth IRA from the Roth IRA and then put those assets in trust, but trusts can only hold Roth IRA as a inherited Roth IRA. The idea that value stocks are finally about to wake up after a decade of sleep is almost a joke in economic circles. What is at least slightly different about the vanguard is that its model shows that investors are right in avoiding value stocks, at least until the last few years. Our research shows that there is a value premium and that the recent over-performance of growth stocks can be partly explained by falling long-term inflation levels and the lack of a significant acceleration in profit growth over the past decade, the company says. The major U.S. stock-indices hover around all-time highs, and a question that often pops up these whether the valuations of certain companies may be excessive. However, some operate at the opposite end of the spectrum, and could still offer investors untapped opportunities. H.C. Wainwright analyst Ram Selvaraju points in the direction of Sorrento Therapeutics (SRNE) as one of these companies. Selvaraju rates SRNE a purchase along with a price target of $30, which implies 275% upside from current levels. (To watch Selvaraju's history, click here) Well, for starters, Sorrento has a stake in two cell-based immunotherapy companies that could drive value in Sorrento shares in the coming months. One is Celarity, a clinical stage cell therapeutic company focused on cell cancer drugs, infectious diseases, and degenerative diseases. Celarity is expected to go public later this year through a SPAC merger with GX Acquisition Corp. The value of the merged company's equity after the transaction closes will land at about $1.7 billion. Selvaraju estimates Sorrento's position should be worth in the region of $200 million. The second company is NantKwest, which recently signed a merger agreement with ImmuneBio. The transaction is expected to close at 1H21. Sorrento owns approximately 8.2 million shares of the clinical stage immunotherapy company. These are currently worth about $121 million, going from NantKwest's recent share price. In addition, the analyst points to Sorrento's growing asset portfolio covering three different therapeutic areas (non-opioid pain management, oncology and COVID-19). In fact, on the Covid-19 front alone, Sorrento has taken a broad-based approach and has a long list of diagnostic, prophylactic and therapeutic offerings in the pipeline, with updates likely to come quickly and furiously. These include two rapid detection tests; COVI-STIX, for which the company applied for an Emergency License (EUA) in the U.S. in December, and COVI-TRACE, which Selvaraju claims could come in handy at any mass gathering event. We believe that the incentive to facilitate large-scale and indeed ubiquitous development of the COVI-TRACE test is extremely high and governments around the world may seek to implement this in their respective regions, the 5-star analyst said. Other Covid-19 candidates include COVIGUARD - a SARS-CoV-2 neutralizing antibody, COVI-AMG - a version of coviguard neutralizing antibody, neutralizing cocktail of antibodies called COVI-SHIELD and COVIDTRAP, an ACE2 receptor bait, intended to mimic the mammalian ACE2 receptor that acts as the main gateway for the SARS-CoV-2 virus to penetrate human cells. It was relatively quiet when it came to other analyst activities. In the past three months, only two analysts have issued ratings. However, since they were both Buys, the word on the way is that SRNE is a modest Market. Based on At a $25.50 average price target, shares could climb 219% higher in the next twelve months. At a time when millions of people are strapped for money and count on their income tax refund or a stimulus check, they will have to wait a little longer before they can file their taxes. February 12 marks the first date on which the Internal Revenue Service will begin accepting and processing returns. Tax period began January 27 last year. Business Investor DailyThe $1.9 trillion Joe Biden plan to accelerate the recovery will not include tax increases. However, President-elect Biden's tax debate took the Dow Jones off to a bad start Friday.Four things could burst the rational bubble in equities, says Mohamed El-Erian - even if it's not likely to happen right now. Here are the top stocks of analysts to buy in the first quarter. The S&P 500 closed 2020 at all-time highs with optimism around additional government stimulus measures and a possible global economic recovery in 2021.For the second time in a week, hydrogen fuel cell company Plug Power (PLUG) had big news to report. Last week, as you may recall, it was a $1.5 billion alliance with Korea's SK Group to build a hydrogen economy for South Korea. This week, it's a deal to build fuel cell trucks in France along with local partner Renault - and although Plug didn't attribute a price to it, investors still cheered like crazy, sending Plug stock up more than 22% in one day. As Plug revealed on Tuesday, it signed a memorandum of understanding with the French car industry. Through it, the parties expressed interest in setting up a 50-50 joint venture within the next six months to supply hydrogen fuel cell vehicle solutions, refuelling infrastructure and services to customers in France -- and to capture 30% of the market for light commercial vehicles powered by fuel cells in the country. Renault will provide car manufacturing capability, and plug will provide cell systems to make them go zoom! Plug will also manufacture hydrogen supply systems to power up trucks on the road. Shareholders weren't the only ones happy with Plug Power's announcement, and analyst Christopher Souther at B. Riley quickly ran out a note doubling down on buying his rating for share plug, and raising his price target by more than 50%, to $79 per share. (To keep track of Souther's history, click here) light commercial vehicles are expected to increase from virtually zero today, to 500,000 units by 2030. Souther raised its long-range forecast for Commercial Vehicles Plug revenue accordingly. In fact, well before 2030, it estimates the Plug stock at 20 times its 2024 fiscal year sales forecast. What exactly is this prediction? Souther didn't say directly. But a $79 share price would imply a business value of just over $37 billion for the Plug share, implying that the analyst sees the new relationship with Renault pushing Plug's 2024 revenue above $1.8 billion -- about a six-fold increase over Plug's final revenue of $308 million. Curiously, this estimate is nearly double the $1 billion in revenue for the 2024 fiscal year that plug itself most recently promised. And here's another curious thing about Souther's predictions: While it doesn't explicitly put a number on its 2024 forecasts, Souther gave detailed speculation on what Plug would produce closer term, predicting full-year 2020 sales and full-year 2021 sales as well. Contrary to the average consensus on Wall Street, where most analysts agree Plug made perhaps $329 million in sales last year, Souther believes the company's revenue was only $291 million. Similarly, consensus estimates for fiscal year 2021 put Plug's sales at $444 million -- but Southern sees only $419 million. Now, how the analyst goes from forecasting disappointing results for two consecutive years, to forecasting sales twice what Plug itself promises just three years from now is not clear enough. And why he recommends that investors buy Plug ahead of what, by his own admission, seem likely to be sales frustrations are similarly opaque. Then again, as Souther himself laments: No matter how expensive Plug stock gets, it's hard to combat the cosmic tailwinds. That's B.B.'s point of view. The current perspective offers an enigma. On the one hand, based on 10 Buys and 1 Hold, the stock has a strong Buy consensus rating. However, after rising so high recently, analysts expect shares to cool and predict a downside of 18% from current levels. Automakers around the world are shutting down assembly lines due to a global shortage of semiconductors that in some cases has been exacerbated by the Trump administration's actions against key Chinese chip factories, industry officials said. The shortage, which caught much of the industry off-guard and could continue for many months, is now causing Ford Motor Co, Subaru Corp and Toyota Motor Corp to limit production in the United States. Automakers affected in other markets include Volkswagen, Nissan Motor Co Ltd and Fiat Chrysler Automobiles. (Bloomberg) -- U.S. stock futures fell, erasing early gains, as investors assessed the details of President-elect Joe Biden's $1.9 trillion spending-bill proposal, which includes $350 billion in assistance to the states. Contracts for the S&P 500 index fell 0.4% at 11:36 .m in London, after up 0.2% earlier. The underlying index lost 0.4% in the cash session, with investors worried about the federal reserve's policy path now showing signs of faster inflation. Europe was followed by the Stoxx Europe 600 index, down as much as 0.7%, dragged lower by energy and mining shares. The healthcare sector outperformed and was the only industrial group firm firmly on the green. The Fed's largesse and previous federal spending packages worth nearly $3 trillion have fueled a 70% gain in U.S. equities since the pandemic lows in March. Biden's plan -- which has been telegraphed for some time since his election in November -- is more than double the package approved in late December, and proposes sending $1,400 to skilled people. It also calls for raising the federal minimum wage to $15 an hour.U.S. stocks have pushed to record after record-breaking vaccine approvals and biden's election in November. His agenda, including ambitious aid and a follow-up plan to spend on projects such as infrastructure, got a boost January 5 when Democrats won control of Vice President Kamala Harris's vote to help seal Democratic victories on issues that require a simple majority for passage to the evenly divided upper house. However, Biden's proposals, state aid and health care money are likely to require 60 votes, which seems difficult to achieve. Given the Republicans' aversion to state aid, Mr. Trump's bipartisan hopes of a new president have been dashed. Biden will be tested immediately, Jeffrey Hallie, senior market analyst at Oanda Asia Pacific Pte., wrote in a note. And that's before the new version of the America accounts come through with almost certain tax increases. The record rise in stocks has stretched valuations to levels not seen in two decades, triggering warnings of a bubble that will lead to rapid selling. Sale. they have been tolerated so far because of Biden's commitment to boost spending not only on direct aid, but also on fighting the virus and rolling vaccines. His bill sets aside $20 billion for a national vaccine program and $50 billion to expand testing capacity. The foam marks abound, though. In a note titled This Is Ridiculous, Bespoke Investment Group summed up the recent action. It reported 59 U.S.-listed shares traded at prices that are more than 10 times sales and have more than doubled in the past three months. Stocks currently in this category have risen 760% since March and have a combined market capitalization of $320 billion, according to George Pearges, global macro strategist at the company. Stimulus is always going to be net positive for short-term growth and earnings, but the question is always how much it's already priced in, said Dan Suzuki, deputy chief investment officer at Richard Bernstein Advisors. There's more room for stimulus to get prices out of here, but it only adds to the cyclical recovery that will most likely take place regardless of whether stimulus gets passed.
