Toastmaster word of the day

February 1, 2011 / Parker Toastmasters / Article, Blog by Bill Morgan | It's hard at first look to choose the words of the day. If you use ambiguous language from Elizabethan England, you can't participate much. When you choose a negative word, people don't attract the feeling of using it. Grammars usually have no problem choosing words in practice, but they imagine how it can be used which can be very difficult. When you had to choose a word, you probably opened a dictionary and thesaurus and randomly selected one. You can go to the online dictionary (try .com.reference). There you can not only give a word, but also automatically email !! It means that adjectives and adverbs are the best, and there should be more positive connotations than can be widely used. The words of a great day are like a delicious dressing in a salad - it makes a great speech even better!
