June 16, 2007 Robin Stubbert In what she calls her special retreat, Kathy Young finds solace and sophistication in Fredericksburg, Texas. 1 in 10 Sunday House While just 10 years old, this home is modeled after one of the 100-year-old Sunday homes sprinkled across Texas Hill Country. Built by German-American farmers and ranchers who came to town on Saturday for supplies and spent the night for the church the next day, Sunday houses were small second houses with outdoor staircases (to save space). 2 out of 10 mixed pattern furniture she used to be in bed-and-breakfast when she came to visit Fredericksburg, but last year Kathy Young left nearby San Antonio for good and bought this cozy 1,600-square-foot cottage she shares with her son, Trey, along with Andy and Bubba (Welsh Pembroke corgis) and Jerry, border collie. I wanted a house with great charm and character, but I also loved the fact that it was a brand new home, she recalls. She also loved his wraparound porch and the way each room opens out, which gives a sense of space. To complement his turn-of-the-century style, Kathy chose antiques and new pieces that were finished to look old, most of them bought with the help of Jennifer Eggleston (Deep in the Heart, Country Living April 2005) from Homestead, a store that put Fredericksburg on the map for home-furnishings fans. You don't have to go too far to find what you're looking for, says Kathy, who once owned designers and plans to open another one. In the meantime, this Sunday house is perfect for every day of the week. Pictured: In the living room, the paisley-and-striped chair-and-a-half armchair came with patterns already mixed and inspired a tangle of custom toss pillows. 3 out of 10 living rooms in the living room of the master bedroom - pastel palette keeps things light and soothing. To add a text interest in ivory slipcovers, Kathy mixed damascus, matelasse, and striped yuck (this last used the wrong side up so that the fuzzy side is down - it looks more formal in this way). Still, not so formally that dogs are not welcome on the couch. NANCY JOHNSON. CARPET, PILLOWS: HOMESTEAD. 4 out of 10 Antique chest old chests is one of my favorite pieces, says Kathy, who draped it with a pink silk scarf. Sher rosebud fabric, left over from bedskirt magnifying glass oriental mirror. ANTIQUE CABINET, ANTIQUE MIRROR: HOMESTEAD. 5 out of 10 female touches I wanted this house to be cozy and warm, but at the same time interesting and unique, says Kathy, whose feminine touch is obvious without being over-the-top. 6 out of 10 Beaded Silk Lampshades I've never seen anything like, says Kathy of a lampshade on top of the mercury-glass base she found on me and my house, a San Antonio store owned, coincidentally, by the sister of homestead owner. 7 out of 10 perfume bottles of satin ribbon on the perfume bottle hiding the break that she fixed with glue that turned yellow, so I just covered her with a bow. 8 out of 10 guest rooms with landscape prints In the guest room on the ground floor, the prints look landscape after their imprint. They remind me of a faded puzzle, says Kathy, whose ranching background is reflected in the subject. ANTIQUE REPRODUCTION PRINTS: HOMESTEAD, REMEMBER ME. 9 out of 10 White blankets was the obvious choice to make a small house look bigger, but I promised you I'd use the paint, too. BLANKETS: HOMESTEAD, EASY SLIPS. PILLOWS, TABLE: HOMESTEAD. PAINTING: RASINES. 10 out of 10 women's bedrooms on an antique white-iron bed top, a pink butterfly pin from Kathy's jewelry store breaks down a large space on the bed cushion. I'd like to cover the whole thing with pebble pins, wouldn't that be fun? And then when you want to wear one, there they are! Layered linens make the bed as graceful as a Victorian dress, starting with a podlipan of motherhair and moving up to a kinky blanket and white lace throw, which is probably a tablecloth, to tell you the truth. This was because Aztec decided to live in central Mexico, most of whom live in a Mexican valley. Since the Mexican valley was surrounded by mountains and lakes, the weather was mostly mild or mild. Many of the areas where the Aztec lived were swampy or dry. Normally, water from the soil is not sufficient to sustain the crops planted by the Aztec due to the condition of the soil. To solve this problem, Aztec invented its own progressive irrigation system for watering their various crops. This irrigation system was also used for the transport of their goods. Goods.
