Tips on writing practice We recently had to reintroduce cursive writing to our eldest son. He's 13 now, but his handwriting has always been a problem. As part of his IEP, he a teacher's assistant who will help him rewrite things or even write things out for him if his work is illegible. This summer we spend a little time each night going over individual letters and then writing words using only the letters he has learned. Since he has some previous experience with italic, we are doing both the upper and small case at the same time. We do two letters every night and track a three to four rows and then do three to four rows of free hand (non-tracing) italic writing. Make sure you see how your child shapes the letters. We had some problems with our son tracing letters backwards. As soon as we're sure he's got the patterns down and can make a free hand, we'll come up with words with only the letters he's learned. In the beginning we had to come up with a few words, but he actually liked to come up with words. Make sure you capitalize on the first letter in these made-up words so that your child can practice connecting capitals on lowers. There are some really cool italic writing worksheets available online. We bought one for our son where we have to write the Declaration of Independence.
