Conference call dialer pro

The ability to organize or participate in a conference call from almost anywhere is a technological advantage that allows convenient interaction with your customers or employees. Calls are made in noisy locations, however - such as at home with the kids around, a crowded café or even a busy office - can disrupt the conversation for everyone. Mute your mobile or land phone allowing the meeting to proceed without any audio distractions. Mute most mobile phones and land phones at the touch of a mute button at once. The button location may vary by phone. It's usually on the keyboard on a landable phone - tap it to mute and when the call is over, tap it again to go back to normal operation. The mute button on a mobile phone is also usually placed on the keyboard and requires just one tap to activate. For example, on an iPhone, you can tap the microphone icon on your keyboard to mute the call, and then tap it again when you want to add it to the conversation. If you can't locate the mute button on your phone, press *6 (Copy 6) and it mutes the call. Tip If you're using headphones, muteing headphones can serve as an alternative to muteing your phone. Mute buttons are usually located near volume controls and on/off. When you hold a conference call with a large number of participants, there's always a risk that someone will forget to mute their phone and interrupt the meeting with background noise. Many conference call services allow servers to mute everyone's phone calling into the meeting. Example: AT&E TeleConference Service T asks the server to push 8 on her phone to do this after she activates the call. This function is disabled for each attendee when he hangs up. Mute Alerts all participants perform best in presentation calls or training calls that participants don't have to join a conversation with.
