V drobnih globinah Minecraftovih oceanov (in kar precej njenih rek) preži precej izjemno bitje – lignje. Lebdeči na mestu, občasno flapping svojih osmih lovk, signje živijo skrivnosten, smiren obstoj. Kaj mislijo, ko bob skupaj z Waves? Wondering how we get away with just four limbs? Are they swallowing what it would be like to deal with gravity? Do they simply ponder why the land-controlled creatures are so bad? We'll never know. But the ignje are special because they were chosen to protect the darkest force in Minecraft - an element with the ability to turn everything that touches pure black. These objects are not rare, but they are powerful. It also happens to be our point of the week. That's right, we have ink today. In 2011, ink bags were added to Minecraft, along with ignji and fifteen other coloring colors. One to three bags fall from the side of the outpourings when they die, but you can also get them while fishing. In Bedrock Edition you will find them in warehouses in the fortresses, or you can make them out of basic elements. Ink bags are imitated. This means that you can use them to change the color of all kinds of things – beds, carpets, concrete, fireworks, shulker boxes, purple glass, banners, wool, sheep and terakota. Ink bags can also be used to make dark prismarine, books and whales, as well as gray and light gray. Forget everything you read in the last paragraph, because Minecraft version 1.14 will change that. We're going to redecopail the copying system, and you're going to be able to use the ink with the spillage to lend things. Instead, we'll add new colors — including a black color made of black ink. Leonardo da Vinci's drawings in Lign's ink Now forget everything you've just read in the rest of the article, because the real-world squid ink isn't even black – it's actually very dark brown. Historically, it was also used as an actual ink called sepia – especially the ancient Greeks and Romans. Most of Leonardo da Vinci's drawing was made in sepia, and fell out of favour only when a modern chemical drawing was created. Ink bags are found in most types of ign, octopus and bead, and consists of a muscle bag located just below the vligom. The ink is made from a natural pigment called melanin, which is the same pigment that creates darker skin tones and hair color in humans and other animals. Squid has ink as a defense mechanism – sometimes they pull out piles like a smoke cane to hide their escape. Sometimes they pull out small pieces, about the same size as them, to confuse a predator into attacking the wrong target. You may have noticed that Minecraft sidi do this when you attack them, too. Today, almost the only remaining use of real-world ink in cooking, where it acts as a color and taste, often for pasta and rice dishes. I've never tried it, but the internet reliably informs me that it tastes like an ocean in a pleasant way – not the way you accidentally swallowed your mouth sea water. Yum!
