Baptism places the child in an external (or external) relationship with the covenant of grace, just as the Israelites who crossed the Red Sea were outside part of the people of God's covenant. Like the Israelites, baptized children have many external benefits of God's children. But until they are regenerated by the Holy Ghost, they remain beyond the saving benefits of the covenant of grace. The biblical version of Church Services is conducted only using an authorized version (King James) of the Bible, but the personal use of other bible translations for comparison is permitted. Almost all songs sung during the service are based on the Book of Psalms. Cult and liturgical forms According to Dutch reformed traditions, most of the liturgical forms used are translations of Dutch forms edited by Petrus Dathenus (1531–1588) and used during the Reformation. Most member churches have services two or three times on Sundays. The theme of one service per week is based on one of the Lord's 52 Days of Catechism in Heidelberg. The service begins with a prayer followed by singing the Psalm. In addition to reading scripture, the 10 commandments are read during sunday morning services, and the Creed of the Apostles is read during sunday evening services. Then the pastor or elder prays with and on his behalf. After praying and singing a song adapted from the Psalms, the pastor preaches. After the sermon there is a closing prayer and more singing of the psalter. The service ends with the pastor praying for god's blessing at the congregation, usually in words 6:24–26. During the service, the congregation is silent and respectful. wear a headdress according to 1 Corinthians 11. [4] The intention of the Current Sermon of the Catechism in Heidelberg is that each of the different doctrines taught in Scripture will be described at least once a year. The Dutch Reformed Church recognizes two sacraments: Baptism and The Supper of the Lords. Members' children are usually baptized in the weeks or months after birth. On the other hand, the Lord's Supper usually takes place about four or five times a year, although it may vary from church to church. Only members who (1) are truly repented of their sins, (2) have fled to Jesus Christ for salvation, and (3) are to live from the heart in true gratitude to God, are welcome to participate. Creed and Creed Church joins the Three Forms of Unity, which are as follows: Belgian Creed (1561) Catechism in Heidelberg (1563) Canons of Dort (1618/19)[6] The Church joins the five Solae Protestant Reformation. Only sacred scripture Faith only Grace Glory only to Christ Glory only to God.[7] History before emigration to North America Netherlands Reformed Congregation of Barendrecht This church was established in 1834 in the Dutch Reformed Church, when a small group in the Netherlands called the Reformed Congregations (Gereformeerde Gemeenten) detached from the state church. Emigrating to North America, moving away from his fellow secessionists Albertus van Raalte and his collaborators Cornelius Vander Meulen and Hendryk Scholte due to doctrinal disputes, led their own emigration first to South Holland, Illinois in 1865, and then to Grand Rapids, Michigan in 1870. After emigration in 1972, there were fourteen Dutch Reformed Congregations in the United States, most still running their services half in Dutch and half in English, with more than five thousand members. 1993 divided church In 1993 there was a split in the Netherlands Reformed congregations as a result of a new denomination by Joel Beeke called Heritage Netherlands Reformed Congregations, which was renamed the Heritage Reformed Congregations in 2005. Both faiths, though divided, continue to cooperate with the running of Christian schools founded by the NRC. Since 2008, the Reformed Heritage Congregations have five churches in the United States and five in Canada.
