Windows 8 Rumored Release Candidate for June, with a slate retail release for October. While this is nothing more than a buzz at this point, these dates seem legitimate, as the announced dates follow very closet to the same development track as Windows 7 - a hint that Microsoft has previously stated they are tracking very closet. [Ars Technica] Google ordered japan search autocomplete to close feature on privacy claim: A Japanese court has approved a complaint from a man who claimed google's autocomplete feature violates his privacy and has even damaged his career. As a result, the court is demanding that Google close the feature. [The following website] AVG Now blocks tracking ads, monitors Wi-Fi connections: Avg's latest update includes a number of new features, such as preventing ad networks from following you over the Internet, and protecting you from fake (and likely malicious) wireless connections. [CNET] [CNET] Google Voice Eyeing Carrier Tie-ups Beyond Sprint: Sprint may currently be the only operator that integrates Google Voice into its service, but that may soon come to an end. In an interview with CNET, Vincent Paquet, Group Product Manager for Google Voice, stated that, We are having discussions with other carriers about it. Unfortunately, Paquet failed to mention which carriers about it. Unfortunately, Paquet failed to mention with the official start of winter we said goodbye to another Internal Tabs. To the family of Intern José: he was diligent and thoughtful, and he gave his all to the sacred cause of newslettering. Before disappearing into the strangely warm fog that has settled over on a thick blanket, ending any hope of seeing the Christmas ghosts this year, left the following note engraved on the wall, handwritten but still on marking for some reason: My tabs practices are over. What's next? I don't know. One thing I've learned during these internships is that I like to write and that I'm not in it. Rusty's continued coverage of internet journalism, however, is terrifying for me. And who really does it in the music industry? Jenn Pelly's clever and passionate article about G.L.O.S.S. and Downtown Boys makes me feel as though I'm really involved in something meaningful, whether it's making music or writing criticism. The idea of doing so doesn't matter so much as being close to something beautiful. This quest has been the only constant in my life – it took me to Seattle, where I met my friends and learned to be in a rock band. Seattle has fewer spaces now than before, but when the housing market goes soft maybe we can score some new territory. And by us I mean that you – I've had my filling lead a place. THE DIY shows are better, and faced with a quick gentrification that forces the beloved places to close, It's easy to concentrate on what you lose. I'd rather try to figure out how we can move forward. Seattle has very good rock journalists and a total lack of interest in friction with bands called Cuntz or Black Pussy. We are not fragile; We're not PC warriors. We're just making a little better spaces than the rest of this wasteland. 1 And I think we'll find out. Serial Season 2 is better than season 1 whoops it's night twitter baby — Brendan O'Connor (@ grendan) December 23, 2015 In #communityarts-related news: KEXP has a new studio cheated. Holy fumes! I hope they let the neighbors play there after they kinda mocked them in one of my eyelashes. Cokemachineglow made a very thoughtful but conceptually intensive end-of-year list where they also announced that editorials were being made. That's a real bumper for me. Despite having known about the site for a while, I didn't really pay much attention until I read Christopher Alexander's review of Art Angels. Emily Nussbaum, claiming hate lists, compiled a list anyway, and said interesting things about the biased lens through which we evaluate prestige television. The Atlantic believes these were the best podcast episodes this year. I'm confused - why put the name of your article Beyond Serial and then put an episode of Serial in ninth place? I applied for practices today in tabs that don't really hope to achieve it. But poble2 has spoken! So thanks to my mother for raising me with an eye toward institutional validation and an allergy to all things; my dad not to blink when I said I'm going to work a service job and try to do it as a musician; my partner, Claire, to encourage me to apply; and Rusty to be cold and show me the path of the tab. I also want to thank Charles for opening his eyes to the potential of the Internet as a creative place Criticism. Did I say criticism? I'm sorry, I was referring to cynicism. So much I'll enjoy sleeping past 7am, I can already say I'm going to miss this. I'm not sure what it is. The money? Power? El Soylent? Rusty said you could all be seeing more content from me at other outlets – I hope that's the case! Maybe I can write for you? Maybe you are a music supervisor and producer type who needs a composer. If you're in a band, I can record you and mix you up. Anyway, if you need me, you can find me in the basement, covered in Soylent, playing with Ableton. Today's Song: Bob Dylan, Queen Jane Approximately~I don't give a damn about my tab reputation~Thank you Jose! We'll miss you. Well, I won't miss you, because none of you interns seem to disappear, but they'll miss you. Thanks to this month's internal sponsors, strange bed companions Soylent and Serious Eats. Look, one way or another you have to feed your meat bowl. Why not make it delicious or easy? Or conceivably both? Food: it is what it is for dinner and all other meals. I am excited to announce that next month's intern will be artist and illustrator Meera Lee Patel, who will make a brave attempt at an unprecedented month of illustrated internal lashes. It's going to be something like that. And that's it for the year at Tabs! Thanks literally to everyone who helped, I hope you know who you are because I'm not going to name names here, except for Fast Company. This has been, on my own, tabs issue #412. Here's less than 412 more! Summer holidays can last six to 14 weeks, or 42 to 98 days, and vary depending on the school year is 180.4 days, according to the National Center for Education Statistics. Summer vacation times may vary depending on the area of the U.S. where the school is located. Most schools in northern states observe summer holidays in early June and run until early September, while southern states generally dismiss classes in late May and then a week or even two weeks during December at Christmas. Autumn and spring breaks are also observed. Dog days of summer are known to be among the hottest of the season. These days they combine listless floating in the pool, struggling to find shade and, of course, panting dogs even though they haven't been running around. It's too hot to run, after all. Despite the phrase's association with heat-beaten canines, it has nothing to do with them. Well, it has nothing to do with dogs land anyway. These hot days were considered among the worst in Western antiquity, a time when, according to folklore scholar Eleanor R. Long, all liquids are when bathing, swimming or even drinking water can be dangerous, and a time when no pain or wound will heal properly. It's also a time when we're probably tired of dogs, if not sick as a dog, to dog it up at work and go to the dogs in our leisure hours shortly, to lead a dog life until the miserable period ends. Both the ancient Greeks and Romans realized that the sirius star - the dog star, Canis major in the constellation Orion - began to rise with the sun shortly after the summer solstice. While this is often the hottest time of summer, and publications such as the Farmer's Almanac placed dog days as they happen between July 3 and August 11 each year, Long notes that Sirius doesn't get up and sets with the sun until mid-August now. Sirius isn't responsible for the dog days of summer. Tragoolchitr Jittasaiyapan/Shutterstock The discrepancy between dates is expected, however, as is the assumption of summer heat coinciding with the sun-related increase in Sirius. During the period after the summer solstice, the Earth's tilt exposes the northern hemisphere more directly to the sun's rays. This means the longest and hottest days that come after the summer solstice; There's no connection to Sirius and his radiation. As for the date difference, the movement of celestial bodies is at stake again. The calendar is fixed according to certain events, but the stars have changed according to the way the Earth wakes up, astronomer Larry Ciupik told National Geographic in 2015. So in about 50-some years, the sky changes by about a degree. Basically, our dog days are not the dog days of the ancient Greeks, and, as National Geographic points out, in a few thousand years, the rise of Sirius will not even occur in summer. Of course, some places have a different kind of dog day to fight for. Sirius' ascent to heaven in the southern hemisphere means things are about to get quite cold due to the arrival of winter. As Long explains, the phrase dog days also does not occur in a number of other cultures. It wasn't until the introduction of German almanacs in Scandinavia in the 16th century that the phrase even entered cultural traditions there, and in places where Sirius is not called the dog star, there are no summer dog days to be had, or at least they are not told that. While the Greeks called Sirius the dog star, other cultures had different names for it. The ancient Chinese and Egyptians also called the star some form of arrow, although egyptians would later refer to it as the soul of Isis, Osiris' sister and wife. The arrival of Sirius was associated with annual flooding of the Nile River, against the Greek and Roman belief that the Sirius is called Tishtrya, named for the deity that fought against a drought demon and caused abundant rainfall. Lubhdaka, the Hindu identification of Sirius, means hunter or dog, according to Long, but is also called Ardra-Lubhd, or the stolen water. So while our dog days are associated with the unbearable heat that dogs us to fall, the appearance of Sirius has many different meanings, depending on where on Earth you are watching it. of this.
