Volusia County, Volusia County, Florida, is a county located in the state of Florida. The 2005 U.S. Census Bureau estimate for the county population was 496,575. Although Daytona Beach is the most well-known city in Volusia County, its county seat is DeLand, and its most populous city is currently Deltona County. Volusia is the only county in Deltona-Daytona-Ormond Beach, Florida, a metropolitan statistical area, which is the 101st largest metropolitan area by the population in the United States from the 2004 census estimate. Volusia County is crossed from north to south by major Interstate 95 and US Route 1 highways. It is also located at the northeast end of Interstate 4, where it merges with Interstate 95. Volusia County History established in 1855, was named for the Port of Volusia on the east bank of the St. John's River. The origins of the word Volusia are not clear, although there are several theories. The area of present-day Volusia County was inhabited by the indigenous Timucua Indians. Timucua no longer exists as a distinct racial entity, having been decimated by war and disease after contact with European settlers. Evidence of their habitation can still be seen in various areas of Volusia County such as the large shell middens at Tomoka State Park. During the British occupation of Florida, a stranded settlement was begun in southeastern Volusia County by Andrew Turnbull, known as New Smyrna. This colony was connected to St. Augustine, the capital of eastern Florida, by the Route of the Kings. After the colony's failure, many of the menoric heritage made the 70-mile (110 km) journey to live in St. Augustine. The Seminole Indians, descendants of the Creek tribe of Alabama and Georgia who resisted forced resettlement into Indian territory also camped in various parts of Volusia County. During the Second Seminole War (1836â 1842) a large sugar plantation in what is now the town of Daytona Beach was burned by the Seminole. On the east bank of the St. Johns River in Volusia, south of present-day DeBary, General Winfield Scott established a fort/deposit in 1836 named Fort Florida. Geography According to the U.S. Census Bureau, the county has a total area of 1,432 square miles (3,710 km²), of which, 1,103 square miles (2,857 km²) of it is land and 329 square miles (853 km²) of it is water. The total area is 22.98% water. Volusia County is bordered to the west by the St. Johns River and Monroe Lake, and by the Atlantic Ocean to the east. About the size of Rhode Island, Volusia is located 80 km northeast of Orlando, 60 miles (97 km) north of the Kennedy Space Center, and 89 miles (km) south of Jacksonville. Volusia County is the only county in the Deltona-Daytona Beach-Ormond Beach Metropolitan Statistical Area. Regions The Volusia County government divides the county into three regions. This parallels the three calls used by BellSouth, the regional telephone company: East Volusia - also known as the Greater Daytona Beach Area, or the Halifax area (named after the Halifax River that runs through the region), this area includes the cities of Daytona Beach, Daytona Beach Shores, Holly Hill, Ormond Beach, Ponce Inlet, Port Orange and South Daytona; and the surrounding unincorporated areas near these cities. Southeastern Volusia - also known as the Greater New Smyrna Beach Area, this area includes the cities of New Smyrna Beach, Edgewater, and Oak Hill; unincorporated areas near these cities. West Volusia - also known as Saint John's River Country (named after the nearby Saint John's River), this area includes the towns of Barberville, Debary, DeLand, De Leon Springs, Deltona, Glenwood, Lake Helen, Orange City, Pierson and Seville; as well as the surrounding unincorporated areas near these cities. An elected prosecutor is trying to get business out of the public. Defendants may be represented under the auspices of the office of the elected public defender. The county elects a sheriff, immediately responsible to the courts, but also to the state for the enforcement of the laws of the state. Volusia County Sheriff's Deputies provide law enforcement in unincorporated areas of Volusia County, as well as assistance in various municipal police departments such as the Daytona BeachMany Volunteer Police Department work alongside paid professionals. Included is the Citizens' Observing Program (C.O.P.). The O.P.C. volunteers work under the direction of the county sheriff and play a role in the county's police operations. Volusia County Branch Jail is a modern property located on US-92 (International Speedway Boulevard), halfway between DeLand and Daytona Beach. The county jail holds prisoners who have been sentenced to one year or less. Longer sentences must be served in public prisons. Libraries The county centrally controls 16 libraries. The collections included 869,491 books, 83,943 videos, 58,784 audio documents, 2,051 magazines and newspapers, more than 100,000 government documents and 51 licensed databases. Personal computers for public use are connected to broadband in all libraries. It is estimated that 230,000 residents of Volusia County have library cards. A library card is valid at all locations, and documents are loaned between locations through a daily courier service and outside libraries through the inter-library loan. Library cards are free for all Volusia County residents. Economy The overall gross metro product (GDP) of the Volusia County economy increased from $12.98 billion in 2005 to $13.69 billion in 2006; an increase of 709.9 dollars. The GMP is an annual measure of total economic output and sales of goods and services provided in the Metropolitan Statistical Area (MSA), which includes the entire Volusia County and its 16 cities. A $13.69 billion PMP represents a significant flow of new capital resources in an economy with just over 500,000 residents. Local consumer confidence continued immigration of approximately 28,800 new residents, new capital investments for new construction of more than $1.11 billion, and continued growth in professional and health care services continued to drive much of the county's™ economic viability. The Volusia County manufacturing sector™ has maintained a stable and stable position in the local economy, in contrast to downward trends elsewhere in the state of Florida. The total number of manufacturers in the county increased to more than 430 in 2006 and represented a large portion of the GMP™ the county. The manufacturing sector maintains one of the highest average wage levels in the county and generates a higher rate of economic impact circulation than any other industry that includes the local economy. Volusia County's™ manufacturing sector generated an average annual salary of $37,632 in 2006, well above the county's average annual™ salary of $32,200 for all workers. Demography In the 2000 census, there were 443,343 people, 184,723 households and 120,069 families residing in the county. The population density was 402 people per square mile (155/km2). There were 211,938 dwelling units at an average density of 192 per square mile (74/km2).
