The back of the frame opens and the medal can be easily removed from the simple but effective hook that holds the medal brooch. For veterans and their families, cases showcasing military awards occupy an honorable position in the home as a testament to personal and career achievements, as well as an object of historical significance. Shadowbox displays physical cases of medal protection and awards. They have different shapes and sizes. There are wall display cases with space for medals and prizes, as well as memorial boxes that can combine skill badges, patches, company badges and flags. Further enhancements can be achieved by using mementos such as photos, dog tags, and signatures of rewards. According to the general protocol for displaying medals, the highest titles should be placed at the top left in order of priority. You should put together medals of the same category (e.g., all stars, with the highest ranking at the top left, and then patch, pin, and ribbon). Author Yisela Alvarez Trentini is a social anthropologist + UX designer and founder of IdentifyMedals. She has always been interested in the history of war and its protagonists and wants to help people identify awards as a way to keep these stories alive. In her spare time, Yisela wanders the fields of Hessen carrying a metal detector or sits in front of her computer/VR set building educational websites and applications. You have served your country, put your life on the line, and there are many medals and prizes to show for it. Proudly show your worthy recognition in a case showing careful and professionally crafted military medals from the U.S. Army Medal. Present your service awards in advance and center and keep them safe and contained. Browse the collection of flag cases, coin racks, ball boxes, and more.
