Reading street 2nd grade spelling words

Image: Test Hero Credit Are you a spelling champion and ready to prove it? Even for many people who grow up speaking the English language, spelling poses a lifelong challenge. This is because the English language is exceptionally delicate. A true mutt of a language with roots and influence from all over the world, words from different sources often have different spelling rules. Words with Latin roots, for example, look, ring and are spelled differently from words with Greek roots. This is part of the reason why English seems to have inconsistent rules. There is a reason why spelling bees are popular contests that people often watch in total suspense. It takes a great deal of skill to spell some of the longest, strangest and most misleading words in the English language that are perfectly under pressure. Most people even have a few errors when using a spelled ch eteur. Spelling words perfectly, the first time, memory requires an impressive amount of brain power. It can be difficult, and sometimes even seem impossible, to get every last delicate word perfectly correct. Are you still proud to be able to spell even the most difficult words? If you think you can hang with the National Spelling Champions, take this quiz! Let's start with the misspelling of the word misspelling. Did you know that misspelling is often misspelled? If you don't, you might be in trouble. Too many people spell a misspelling with a single s, as in misspelling, when the word actually has two s. Double letters can cause a lot of confusion among writers, so if you never remember how many s and p are in Mississippi, then you're not alone! Another reason why words are often misspelled is because of silent letters, as in the word pneumonia. We certainly don't pronounce the p, do we? And why on earth is the word knight spelled with a k? At least you can't confuse it with night which seems to have a superfluous g floating in there. Phew! If we haven't completely confused you, take this quiz to find out how many often misspelled words you can identify! Copyright   2020 InfoSpace Holdings, LLC, a System1 company I know the words, I have the best words, Donald Trump We. Like big-ly and braggadocious. It turns out that these are also the words of a 7th grader. That's what About.com's data science team found after reviewing transcripts of Trump's campaign appearances and asking for the help of some language experts. It's not terribly surprising that Trump's words are less refined than those of the HRC, but the gap between the two candidates is quite surprising when you think about it. It's five years of formal education! says Jon Roberts, vice president of data science at About.com. A yuge gap indeed.
