My previous host has had problems with my server and I felt it was time to move on. So I'm on a new host with a fresh MangoBlog install. New posts are inevitable, but good stuff from my [old] blog will be moved soon. Hopefully this accident and re-incarnation is not a thorn in anyone's. This is just a quick post about and <cfqueryparam></cfqueryparam> cf_sql_type with when working with Microsoft SQL Server (MSSQL) money datatype. While working to use decimal (8.2) fields where I've stored the money data. As we started loading the data into a table with money as a data type, we noticed that amounts like 129.99 were rounded to 130. ColdFusion 9 reference & It;cfqueryparam> & It;/cfqueryparam> & It;/cfqueryparam double datatype. ColdFusion 8 reference shows using cf_sql_decimal, storing data decimal, money, smallmoney mssql data types. I followed the suggestion of cf8 references, but ran into a rounding error. Finally, I was hipped to the right cf_sql_type use my good friend Matt Quackenbush. He has experienced the same issue in the past and informed me that the solution is to use cf_sql_float. Over the past year, I have dabbled over and over with leveraging AOP in my applications, mostly logging and caching. Recently I needed to analyze system performance and determined that for some operations, there were several points where third-party integration is managed. These points slowed demand for lifecyle dramatically and were focused on re-written using cfthread. I love a good refactoring challenge as much as the next guy, but I also love good abstraction. Thus, AsynchronousAroundAdvice was born. read more... Today, I was able to get https working on localhost connections after these step-bystep instructions to create and sign cert and update httpd.conf and httpd-ssl.conf on Mac OS X Hints. The problem is, I need https for vhosts. I encountered the following error when I tried to connect to the local vhost using https: Error code: ssl_error_rx_record_too_long). A lot of googling turned up an answer. You need to turn SSLEngine on for vhosts. Thanks to ubuntu forums for that gem. Here is an example of vhost that uses SSL. &It;VirtualHost 127.0.0.1:443=>DocumentRoot /Users/paul/Sites/myproject.fancybread.localSSLEngine OnSSLCertificateFile /Users/paul/Sites /certs/localhost/newcert.pemSSLCertificateKeyFile /Users/paul/certs/localhost.nopass.keyDirectoryIndex index.cfm</Directory/users/paul/certs/localhost.nopass.keyDirectoryIndex indekss.cfm Opcijas + Indeksi FollowSymLinks + ExecCGI AllowOverride AuthConfig FileInfo Order</VirtualHost> Order</VirtualHost> Order data conversion. Over the past year, I've started applying AOP with ColdSpring to my application design. I was totally confused about just what was going on with AOP when I first looked at it, then, in degrees, I came to realize that it's really pretty simple if you can focus on the basics without trying to absorb all the rules associated with AOP. With the release of ColdSpring 1.2, Brian Kotek wrote an excellent quickstart guide that I recommend (especially the AOP tutorial, which I borrow heavily from this example). I briefly describe how I wrapped my head around the concept. read more... I've started using Coldbox recently and really like the tooling it provides. I don't always have access to ColdFusion logs apps on shared servers, and although I've worked with log4j, I do not develop the file configuration. The simplicity of the ColdBox logger is great, but I wanted to be able to set the log level and work with standard debugging(), info(), warn(), error() and fatal() methods. One way to achieve this is to confuse the desired behavior. Another ColdBox plugin, methodInjector, allowed me to do just that. read more... Maintaining referential integrity in a database is a good thing. Any decent RDBMS will include ACID (Atomicity, consistency, insulation, durability) transaction support to ensure consistency and recoverability in your database. Transfer ORM Transaction can easily apply transactions to the Service or Gateway. Here's how it can be used to wrap all stored and deleted methods of the service. read more... For migration to mango Blog, I wanted to keep my previous RSS feed location (/rss.cfm). The new location is feeds/rss.cfm. With the availability of onMissingTemplate event handler 8 ColdFusion, making sure my RSS feeds didn't break was a snap. Here is the code I adds to the Application.cfc snippet. <cfargument name=thePage type=string required=true> <cfif argument.thepage=is=/blog/rss.cfm=> <cflocation url=/blog/feeds/rss.cfm addtoken=false></cflocation> </cfif></cfargument></cffunction> Not the most elegant solution I've ever developed, but it keeps the RSS feed alive until I decide how I want to manage it in the future... In my last post, I showed a generic factory use to create transient items in my Coldfusion apps. I didn't have hard data to answer Jaime's question, so I was able to create a jMeter for my new dev machine and run with some load tests to find out. ReadBy learning how to apply the object-oriented principles of ColdFusion development, one will surely encounter the subject of design patterns. Singleton, Factory, Strategy and Bridge are just a few of the models that describe solutions to common problems in planning. In this example, I will show you variations of the factory?
