Advertising is the study of the effect that distant cosmic bodies, usually stars and planets, have on human life. The position of the sun, stars, moons and planets at the time of people's birth (not their imagination) is said to shape their personality, influence their romantic relationships and predict their economic fortunes, among other dives. What most people know about astronomy is their sign, referring to one of the 12 zodiac constellations. This is a form of astronomy marking the sun, which is the astronomy on which newspaper horoscope is based. It's probably the easiest shape, because nothing more than someone's birth date is needed to produce a sun sign horoscope. Many astronomers will tell you that this form of astronomy is so simplified that it produces very limited results. To generate more accurate reading, astronomers check to see what each planet is in at birth (see next section). Planets and signs are combined with other elements such as houses and angles to form complex and often very specific profiles of a subject's personality, life and future prospects. There is no single theory or action of astronomy. Ancient cultures all practiced their own forms, some of which combined and evolved into today's common Western astronomy. Eastern cultures continue to practice their forms of astronomy: Chinese astronomy, wedik and Tibetan are among the most well-known. Even within Western astronomy there is a significant variety of methods and philosophies. Some divide astronomy based on the final result intended: mundane astronomy - it's used to explore world events and predictions about national affairs, wars and economies. Interrogation astronomy - This branch can be placed more subdivisions, but generally refers to astronomy, which seeks to make specific predictions or analyses about the subject's goals or events within the subject's life. Natale astronomy - that's what most people think of when they think about astronomy. Natal astronomy seeks to perform predictions and analyses based on the person's birth date. It's based on the idea that whatever happens to something is expressed at the very beginning of that thing, sometimes known as the Law of Beginning (Burke, pg. 5). In the next section we will find out what astronomy can tell us and how astronomers get that information. I don't know about you, but reading daily horoscope is inseparable, it should have been part of my morning routine. Because in a reality as wild and unpredictable as ours, it's well down to a little cosmic insight into what to expect from your life over the next 24 hours, and perhaps a few hints at how to manage your day, too. As an astronomer, I can look and get at my current planetary events A good idea of how the cosmos might affect me personally - but that doesn't stop me from reading my horoscope as written by other astronomers, just like any other. Each astronomer interprets planetary alignments differently, so it's good to get the landscape. Good Omens is a thoughtful art that takes ancient cosmic wisdom, applied it to the current position of planets in astronomy, and interprets how those influences might play out in a person's life. It's a way to connect the mundane aspects of your day to the extensive, ancient practice of astronomy. Can I let you have a secret? There are actually some anesthotic tips that can help you way more than your daily horoscope using only one basic background in astronomy. So if you want to make the most of your daily slopes, then knowing how to read your horoscope like an astronomer is an infinitely useful skill. More good news? It's easy to do. Here's how you can get the most out of your horoscope and connect with your daily astronomy on a new level. With your birth charts to know if you really want to read your horoscope like an astronomer, the most important thing to start with is with a basic understanding of your astronomical birth chart. Your birth chart is a pie-shaped map depicting the placement of stars and planets in the zodiac at the moment you were born. You need an exact date of birth, location, and time in order to whip this up carefully, so dig out your old birth certificate! There are many useful astronomy programs for your birthday chart that can help you get started on this exploration - and once you've rolled the ball, you can either start reading your birthday chart at home or consult with a professional astronomer who can guide you through the ins and outs of your personal star map. Your birth chart includes 12 astronomical houses, each representing a different aspect of your life and your own. Once you know where the Zodiac will crash each of your 12 homes and which laws sign each of them on your chart, you can start looking at where the planets are in the zodiac and figure out which of your homes (or which parts of your life) those planets are being activated, or passing through. These houses (along with large planets in astronomy) are what astronomers look at when drafting your daily, monthly or monthly horoscopes, thus helping to develop an idea of what they represent. Read your horoscope to increase your SignIt time to start reading your horoscope for your rising sign in addition to your sun sign (aka your 'ol' zodiac sign regularly), because you'll likely find that it's much smarter. It may feel strange to read the horoscope for a sign that you don't immediately identify with, but try it - and watch your mind be blown when you realize how much it actually resonates. It is important to have a horoscope for the sign Read your own, as well as The sun marks because they are more logical and resonate on a deeper surface that way, astronomer Lisa Stardust tells Bustle. That's why: Your rising sign, also known as your ascendancy, is one of the most important pieces of information you'll glenn from your birthday chart. The reference to the zodiac sign is that the cusp of your first home has fallen - which means that this sign dictates the placement in the zodiac of all the other homes that follow. (You can read all about what your increase marks mean and how to calculate yours if you're unfamiliar with it!) But if horoscopes are written more accurately for our rising signs, then why do they all read them for their sun signs? Well, the only thing you need to know your sun mark for the most part is a birthday that makes it so easy to calculate the top of your head, which is why pop astronomers start writing the sun sign on the day when the sun is the assumption that the sign of the sun is the sign of the first house and using it instead of the sign of the increase - which is the way people can read their horoscope while accidentally flipping through a magazine without. Need to find your exact birth time and calculate the total birth chart. This is not to say that reading your horoscope as you are usually completely untrue - the sun is the most important and influential of the planets in the zodiac game. But if you want a little more detailed 'scope that reflects your life in a more over-located way,' try reading for your rising cue from now on, too, and watch as things start to make sense. The pursuit of the moon in the zodiac of the moon in astronomy is known as one of the most influential planets in the category, as it decrees our emotions, mood and inner self. It is also the fastest moving planet, as it spends only about 2 and a half days per zodiac sign before circursing to the next mark (other planets spend anywhere from a few weeks to a few years per sign, for comparison!). That means its influence on us is constantly changing, and as far as your day-to-day astronomical drama goes, looking at the moon can provide a lot of insight. That's why astronomers use the moon when writing horoscope. If you want to start syncing yourself a little further with astronomy in general, download an astronomy app that will show you what zodiac sign the moon is in and explore the ways in which you feel the vibe of that sign is throughout the day. For example, if the moon is in Liberia, you may feel a little more social and relationship-focused, while if the moon is in Capricorn, you'll be more focused on the goal and you'll be busy working. You can also go to which house on your birthday chart with a sign that the moon is now ruling through travel - this will show you a part of your life being illuminated by the energy of the moon all day, and the area where you are likely to be its influence. You will likely see these themes reflected in your daily horoscope, too. When you whip up your birthday chart and calculate your moon mark, you can use it to start taking a more emotional view of your daily horoscope as well. Instead of applying your mahmark to your life, as you would with your Sun or rising sign's 'scopes,' think of it as a more private horoscope that tells you about the landscape of your inner world and emotional state. When it comes to astrology and horoscopes, interpretation is everything — that's why you can read 10 different astrologers' horoscopes and get totally different vibes from each one. They all look at the same planet, but those planets may talk different facts to anyone who analyzes them, and that's fine. That's why getting in touch with your astronomy and understanding how to read your horoscope more effectively is a great way to get out of action more - and to take ownership of your interactions with the cosmos alms.
