(展开全部) The captivating true story of a small town ravaged by industrial pollution, Melds melds hard-hitting investigative reporting, a fascinating scientific detective story, and an unforgettable bunch of characters into a sweeping narrative in the tradition of A Civil Act, the Emperor of All Diseases, and The Immortal Life of Henrietta Lacks. Toms was one of New Jersey's seemingly countless quiet coastal towns, becoming the unlikely setting for a decade-long drama that culminated in 2001 with one of the largest court battles in the annals of toxic dumping. A city that would rather have been known for its Little League World Series champions ended up making history for a very different reason: a notorious cluster of childhood cancers scientifically linked to local air and water pollution. For years, major chemical companies had used Toms as their private dumping ground, burying tens of thousands of leaked drums in open pits and unloading billions of acid-laced wastewater into the city's namesake river. In an astonishing feat of investigative reporting, award-winning journalist Dan Fagin recounts the sixty-year saga of rampant pollution and inadequate oversight that made Toms a cautionary example for fast-growing industrial cities from South Jersey to southern China. He tells the stories of the pioneering scientists and doctors who first identified pollutants as a cause of cancer, bringing to life the everyday heroes of Toms who fought for justice: a young boy whose cherubic smile belied the rapidly growing tumors that had decimated his body from birth; a nurse who struggled to bring the alarming incidence of childhood cancer to the attention of authorities who did not want to listen; and a mother whose love for her affected children transformed her into a tenacious advocate for change. Toms is a gripping human drama rooted in a centuries-old scientific quest, and is a tale of dumpsters at midnight and deception in daylight, of corporate savagery and government neglect, and whether some brave individuals who refused to remain silent until the truth was revealed. Dan Fagin is associate professor of journalism and director of the Science, Health, and Environmental Reporting Program at the Arthur L. Carter Journalism Institute at New York University. The Association of Scientists Authors. Excerpts from the discovery of a cluster of child cancers to the decision to investigate and reach identification for suspicious causes - nothing has been determined in advance by ongoing, proactive government oversight. On the contrary, it was the right instrument that was in the right instrument. Mediation is better than confrontation, reconciliation is better than victory. The basis of the civil justice system - the ability to solve its own problems and make themselves happy by defeating others - is a lie. People have believed this lie since they said, 'I'm going to use legal weapons to impose my will on you.' The law will disappoint you, it exists only for itself. The truth also does not belong to 10 parties. But the victims are often convinced that they want is evidence and confirmation, but these things are not available from the legal system.
