How to get a receipt from eBay

To print buyer bills on eBay, simply go to your eBay account and head to the account tab. Go to the invoice box, and choose Invoice from the drop-down menu. Now choose to view or print the invoice of your choice. However, if by invoice meant a packaging slip, there is a link to the label creation page to Print a packing slip right in the center of the page. Clicking on it will open the packaging slip in a new window so you can print it. An additional option for marketers is to log into their eBay account seller center; Click the orders tab or all orders to locate the specific order. To the left of each order, you will find a drop-down menu, where you will find Print labels or shipping invoices and you will see the options. Choose Invoice/Packaging, click Continue, and you'll be on the Print page, from where you can easily print your invoice. Received? Headquarters Ebay .not Macys. Go PayPal and call you. There you will find all the items you have paid for PayPal. The cost and shipping fee would be shown. Go PayPal, sign in, and then click HISTORY. Have fun. How can I obtain a receipt for a purchase 2 years ago and print the order details of your purchase summary. The purchase confirmation emails you received are also your receipts. A life is all we have to liveLove is all we have to give  Formerly known as MissJen316 I just placed an order today. How can I receive a receipt? If you don't have a printer at home or access to your account at work, go to the Public Library. You may need a library card, but these are free. Most libraries today have Internet access and printing enabled. I always do this as I'm registered as a business, but I've had a few things lately that I've bought from other registered companies that haven't come up with anything, which is damn annoying if it's something I put through the books as an expense. I know I can print my own eBay receipt, but it's not the same as a sent one, when I sell something, I print out of the address/invoice label and sales information. as a whole, so I have a receipt to send them and a copy for my records. how would you keep the records if you didn't? There is a light that never pans Essential Money | Who and where are you? | Work and Benefits | Home & Travel | Shopping & Gifts | About MSE | Moneysavers Weapons | Support covid-19 and coronavirus While browsing eBay, it's not uncommon to come across more than one item a seller is selling that you'd like Trying to buy more than one item can be tricky because it requires you to go through an extra step you wouldn't normally take. Sellers can offer a combined invoice to This Now items. Be sure to get a receipt for the items you buy and only pay once for your purchases. From time to time, you can find sellers willing to offer shipping discounts for buying more than one product. Hello everyone, tax deductible company expenses are typically purchased from other companies that provide a professional-looking receipt or invoice. How can I make tax-deductible business purchases from different types of private sellers? That is, without raising eyebrows... Of course, I can go asking the private seller for a handwritten or written receipt, but even this is not always simple as it may seem. For example, if I make the purchase from eBay, I have a printable confirmation email from the purchase date, the amount paid and a brief description of the item (sometimes the brief description of the title isn't even great), but it doesn't really always show the seller's name and address (it shows an eBay username, and occasionally an address that spends on whether the user has chosen to publish this). It's a similar scenario with purchases from Amazon sellers, whose addresses aren't shown in the order confirmation email. I wonder if the lack of address and real name of private sellers not being on email purchase confirmations ever causes a problem? In the case of Ebay and Amazon purchases, it would be quite difficult for HMRC to argue that the purchase described did not take place. And in most (but not all. for example, collecting in person/cash only) cases there would be an electronic transaction/transfer to back it up (for example. PayPal, Bank transfer to PayPal, transfer of payment card to PayPal, or purchase of credit/ debit cards). But what if the purchase was made from a private seller on Gumtree? Of course, it's very normal for these sellers to expect cash as they don't usually have the ability to process card payments. And by accepting a PayPal they actually posed as a significant risk, of having the transaction reversed by unscrupulous buyers who would exploit buyer protection PayPal which favors buyers over sellers. In this scenario, you could provide a handwritten receipt, of course, but the fact that this is a cash transaction without any third-party email confirmation would cause any problems? And finally, if a cash transaction with a handwritten receipt is all it takes to satisfy HMRC, then what about a private sale of a friend to your business? Would there be any benefit to carrying out this electronic transaction, from your company bank account to your friends account? After all, if it is a cash transaction received handwritten/written, what is stopping friends increasing the figure on the bill in order to reduce the profit of the business? Can HMRC reject a business expense on the basis that it is too expensive? Of course, the reason I'm doing these queries is that more often than not goods are often on eBay and especially gumtree for much less than the normal RRP of a product. Most often, these items are new and/or unused (e.g. unwanted gifts, stock clearing). It would be a shame if there wasn't a way to take advantage of these lower prices without raising undue suspicion. I would love to hear from any tax professional about how HMRC deal with these transactions in practice, and what can be done to make such transactions in a way that would cause fewer problems with HMRC.
