Please share! D0.V16k STAR-ADVERTISER/2019 University of Hawaii officials have cancelled several previously planned trips to the mainland and abroad, as well as several events. UPDATE: University of Hawaii President David Lassner confirmed this morning that the University of Hawaii system will become an online course by the end of the month due to concerns about the coronavirus pandemic. At this point, I want to let you know that, for the safety of our students, faculty and staff, the University of Hawaii will transfer our classes online after spring break, starting Monday, March 23, Lassner wrote in an email early this morning to the faculty. He said he will return a statement with more details and further announcements later in his life. Spring break for the UH system starts on Monday. PREVIOUS COVERAGE The University of Hawaii is preparing to move on to all online courses if necessary due to the coronavirus outbreak. The health and safety of our students, faculty and staff is our primary concern. UH officials said in a post Tuesday. The university is taking steps to prepare for the transition to online course delivery if deemed necessary. However, at the moment we have not taken the decision to do so. Major continental universities -- including the University of California at Berkeley, Harvard University, and the University of Washington -- chose to move classes online this month. Several universities have also closed student dormitories. The closure of student housing on UH's Manoa and Hilo campuses is not currently under study. University of Hawaii spokesman Dan Meisenzahl said. Administrators of all ten campuses are working closely and with government officials to respond to the COVID-19 health crisis, he said. The UH system, which has a total enrollment of about 46,700 people, is encouraging its faculty, staff and students to observe the guidelines of the Centers for Disease Control and Prevention if to travel during spring break next week. Trips to high-risk countries, or Level 3, designated by the CDC should be postponed or canceled, the UH administration said, and the same should be considered for areas with active community transmission, even within the United States. Those with underlying health conditions should consider postponing or canceling any trip as well, the administration said. A number of previously planned trips to the mainland and abroad have been postponed or canceled, according to Meisenzahl, and have also been several events, including a Polynesian studies conference at UH-Manoa and a student event in Seattle. Hawaii Pacific University, which has just recovered from last week's spring break, had not made announcements about the transition to online courses or possible closures as of Wednesday afternoon. HPU, however, implemented new travel requirements before last week's spring break from its Campus Emergency Response Team, which is monitoring government directives related to COVID-19. Anyone who has visited a level 2 or higher country, including China, South Korea, Japan, Italy or Iran, must notify the director of the Office of International Students and Scholars of the trip and cannot return to campus without approval. All university-sponsored trips, including studies abroad, exchange programs, and visits with partner universities, have been suspended, HPU said. To date, HPU, which has about 4,100 students, said there have been no confirmed cases of COVID-19 on any of its campuses and that no students, faculty or staff are quarantined. The health and safety of our students is our top priority at Hawaii Pacific University, said John Gotanda, HPU president, in a statement. At this time, in-person classroom education continues and at this time our student accommodation remains open. We have developed a number of contingency plans for our standard provision of education and student support services, including alternatives to classroom education in person and how we provide meal service to our students living on campus. HPU student Michelle Peters, who is from Canada, said she wasn't worried about the coronavirus outbreak, nor did she feel there was a need to move classes online. Personally, I don't think we should do that, he said. — UH has created a COVID-19 UH resources page and an email COVID19@hawaii.edu answer questions about the new coronavirus outbreak. Outbreak.
