He had a dream to see his children win gold medals in India. And all he wanted to do to make his dream come to life was a son. The girls had an orthodox belief in being in the wrestling ring and not being in the wrestling ring. And in anticipation of a boy, he fathered four daughters. But one day, when she found out that their daughter had been bullied by a few men, the rest was history. The four daughters are truly the best wrestlers in the world, india has many medals and winners of national and international events. Created by history girls and designed by a man. Mahavir Singh Phogat - Dangal King for female wrestlers in India. Passion for sports: Mahavir Singh Phogat Image Courtesy: desimartini.com Mahavir left a job on the state electricity board to train his two great-daughters Geeta and Babita. He taught them all the tricks he knew. After that, he took them to Dangals in nearby villages. The fear of losing to a girl has put men in doubt about wrestling with them. In addition, the strict education regime was so hectic that none of the children from the extended family could stand it. The girls got the same amount of punishment as the boys. Thus, girls and brotherhood flourished. Neighborhood kids were afraid of being eaten by them. These girls trained from 4 a.m. to 7 a.m., and when they returned from school or college, they would train again in the evening. The popular phogat brothers are not India's first or only sibling wrestlers. Deepika & Sonika, legendary wrestler and Mahavir coach Chandgi Ram's daughters will be responsible. The inspiration for raising girls for wrestling was partly due to the influence of Chandgi Ram and, partly, karnam malleshwari winning olympic bronze medals. The whole village was mocking Mahavir and he called him a man without dignity, but he never let this beating get to his champion girls. Chandgi Ram once told her 'what you do for your daughters, one day you will see that this will bring you great happiness. So keep doing it, don't be afraid, face challenges like face your opponents and be deaf to criticism.
